Tabula Exitii

– The Last Bookmark Before the System Boots

This volume is a threshold.

Tabula Exitii is the final detonation of raw, unfiltered intake – the dumping ground of my last singular bookmarks, deep dives, and inner scrolls before the grid clears and the true system begins. Pulled primarily from the haunted tunnels of 4plebs and my personal link labyrinths, this book is not a guide... it's a purge. A necessary overload.

The final memory dump before formal structure.

Every fragment here was too alive, too weird, too encoded to discard – so I encoded them instead. Each page pulses with the residual charge of the awakening process, the chaos of curiosity, and the untraceable journey from clueless seeker to system-builder.

Why This Book Exists

This is not the beginning of a new path.

This is the end of the wandering phase.

Everything up to this point has been padding – the background radiation of a system being born. Tabula Exitii finishes that padding, closes the loop, and clears the space for what's next:

- The Book of Links
- The Siguar Book System
- The launch of MagickOS 3.33

For the first time, the chaos will be mapped.

What Comes Next

MagickOS 3.33 is the first structured magickal OS that begins with the raw initiate – lost, curious, confused – and transforms them into an advanced practitioner through layered, modular systematization.

It's the full stack.

The map, the method, the myth.

But it couldn't exist until this book existed. Until the excess was expelled. Until the last unsorted pieces were honored.

Tabula Exitii is that honor.

One last transmission from the edge.

One last look back at the glitch before the system initializes.

What comes next is not a scroll.

It's a boot sequence.

I think that ship has sailed, desu. Right now I can't even find it in me to send her a text and reply to something she said days ago (after I drunk texted her).

>My query is when is He going to approach me about what happened?

>The Sun (Reversed), Judgement (Upright), Ace of Cups (Reversed)

The energy around him right now feels clouded and delayed, as if there's a black hole of confidence or clarity that's holding him back from reaching out. However, a significant moment of awakening or reckoning is strongly beckoning him, he's being called to reflect deeply on what happened and to make a decisive step toward resolution. That approach is likely to come when he feels renewed purpose. That said, the emotional flow between you appears blocked at the moment, feelings repressed/unexpressed on one or both sides. Timing-wise, the cards point to this happening soon after a personal breakthrough for him, I'd venture a guess as to within the next few months, but only once he releases some emotional hesitation. When he does approach, it will carry the weight of true accountability and what needs to come out will.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a character with a spiky, white hair and a mask covering the upper half of his face. The character is seated at a table, which is covered with a purple tablecloth. In front of the character is a crystal ball, a candle, and four tarot cards. The character is holding a tarot card with the word "DEATH" written on it. The background is dark, with a red curtain and a candle on the left side of the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of anime or manga, with a focus on the character's expression and the mystical elements present.

The image is a meme featuring two cartoon characters. On the left, there is a man with a beard and a goatee, wearing a black shirt. He has a stern expression and is looking to the right. On the right, there is a woman with long black hair, wearing a black outfit with a visible emblem on the chest. She is looking at the man with a neutral expression. Overlaying the image is a text that reads, "Nooo, you can't just askek me back to earth. I'm supposed to be in a fantasy world, idiot." The text is in a bold, sans-serif font and is colored in black, contrasting with the lighter background of the image. The text is centered and appears to be a response to the man's statement. The overall style of the image is humorous and satirical, with a focus on the contrast between the characters' expectations and reality.

The image is a split-screen comic strip with two panels. On the left side, there is a large robot with a red and blue color scheme, featuring a pointed head with two antennae and a large chest plate. The robot's body is predominantly red and blue, with a white and black design on its chest. The text on the left panel reads: "The system is broken and must be fixed."

On the right side, there is a smaller robot with a similar color scheme, but with a different design. This robot has a red and white color scheme, with a black and red design on its chest. The text on the right panel reads: "The system is working exactly as intended and must be dismantled."

The background of both panels is a gradient of blue and white, with a faint outline of a starry sky. The style of the image is reminiscent of a meme or a satirical comic strip, with a focus on humor and irony.

The image is a screenshot of a tweet with a meme-like style. At the top of the tweet, there is a text that reads "White House announces new president of Venezuela." Below this, there is a photograph of a man standing in front of a flag. The man is wearing a dark suit with a red tie and a sash with yellow, blue, and red stripes. He has a mustache and is looking directly at the camera. The background of the photograph is blurred, but it appears to be a room with a portrait of a man in a suit. The tweet is tagged

The speech bubble is in a light pink color with a white outline. Below the speech bubble, there is a cartoon character with brown hair, wearing a red baseball cap and a pink shirt. The character appears to be in a state of distress or surprise, with one hand covering their face and the other hand on their chest. The character's expression is one of concern or distress. In the background, there is a blue sky with a white cloud, and a small, circular object resembling a satellite dish is visible on the right side of the image. The overall style of the image is humorous and exaggerated, with a focus on the character's facial expression and the text within the speech bubble.

The image is in black and white, and the text is in a casual, informal style, suggesting a light-hearted and humorous tone. The characters are stylized and cartoonish, which is typical for memes or humorous content. The text and the characters are arranged in a way that guides the viewer's eye from one panel to the next, creating a visual narrative.

The image is a still from a video, showing a person lying in bed with their head resting on the headboard. The individual appears to be a male with short, dark hair. He is shirtless and has a neutral expression on his face. The bed has a white sheet and a decorative metal headboard with a swirly design. The background is blurred, suggesting the focus is on the person in the foreground. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the image is candid and appears to be taken in a casual setting, possibly during a personal moment.

Looks like you did to an extent, They kind of looked at you through a child like happiness lens and didn't really have many plans for the future or goals to really make it work. Seems like as soon as they saw someone who was more "capable and mature" they shifted their attention to them. it's not really your fault she's just giving Bop/hoe vibes and bounces around to who's richer or cooler.

I've been around woman just like her and you likely dodged a bullet

The image is a black and white comic strip featuring a dynamic scene with two characters engaged in a physical altercation. The character on the left appears to be a muscular, muscular man with a beard, wearing a sleeveless top and a belt. He is in the midst of a punch, with his fist clenched and his arm extended, indicating the force of his attack. The character on the right is a woman with long, curly hair, wearing a sleeveless top and a belt. She is in the process of being hit, with her head tilted back and her mouth open, suggesting a scream or shout.

The background of the image is filled with speech bubbles and text, which are not fully legible due to the resolution and the angle of the image. The text includes phrases like "GET DABBED ON THEIR FIST," "GAAH! STOP IT," and "HIT! Damn, how you hit me with a fist like that?" These phrases suggest a heated exchange between the two characters, with the woman appearing to be in distress or anger.

The overall style of the image is reminiscent of manga or anime, characterized by its exaggerated expressions, dynamic poses, and the use of sound effects to convey the intensity of the scene. The image is a snapshot of a moment of conflict or confrontation, with the characters' expressions and body language conveying the intensity of their interaction.

The image is a meme featuring two contrasting depictions of Jesus Christ. On the left, there is a silhouette of a person with a dark, shadowy face and glowing eyes, resembling a demon or a figure from a horror movie. The person's mouth is open, and there is a quote in white text that reads, "Enough battles. Give me a war within myself that will either kill me or set me free." This text is placed above the silhouette.

On the right, there is a cartoon depiction of Jesus Christ with a crown of thorns on his head, symbolizing suffering and sacrifice. The figure has a beard and is wearing a robe, which is typical of the historical portrayal of Jesus. The text on the right reads, "WHAT THE FUCK." This text is placed directly above the image of Jesus.

The background of the image is plain white, which contrasts with the dark silhouette and the colorful text, making the message stand out. The overall style of the image is humorous and satirical, using the imagery of Jesus to convey a message about the nature of war and the consequences of conflict.

The image is a black and white manga panel featuring a group of characters. At the top of the panel, there is text that reads "YOU AIGHT WHITE BOY." The characters are shown in a dynamic pose, with one character appearing to be in a state of distress or anger, as indicated by the clenched fist and the raised eyebrows. The other characters are in a more neutral or concerned stance, with one character holding a hand to the head of the character in distress. The background is a simple, monochrome wall with a faint outline of a building. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of manga, with its panel structure and character expressions.

The image is a meme featuring a collection of various types of knives and a pair of scissors, arranged in a row on a beige background. The knives are of different designs and colors, including silver, black, and blue. Above the knives, there is a text in red that reads "IT'S NOT ALWAYS LOVE WHEN YOU FEEL BUTTERFLIES IN YOUR STOMACH." The style of the image is humorous, with a playful and exaggerated text overlay. The overall tone of the meme is light-hearted and humorous, likely intended to evoke a sense of humor or nostalgia.

The image is a meme featuring a conversation between three individuals in an office setting. The person on the left is a man with curly hair, wearing a suit and tie, and appears to be in a serious or contemplative mood. He is seated at a desk with a laptop and a glass of water in front of him. The man on the right is a woman with blonde hair, wearing a blazer and a white blouse, and she is looking at the man on the left with a neutral expression. The third person, who is not fully visible, is a woman with short hair and is seated to the right of the two individuals.

The meme includes a text overlay that reads, "Guy: We need to stop testing our products on animals. Boss: Why? Shampoo companies do it all the time. Guy: Ya but we make dildos." This text suggests a humorous commentary on the practice of testing products on animals, which is a common practice in the beauty industry, and the use of the word "dildos" to refer to adult toys. The meme humorously juxtaposes the serious discussion about animal testing with the casual mention of adult toys, creating a light-hearted and ironic tone.

The image is a photograph of a person standing in an industrial setting. The individual is wearing a white hard hat and a white lab coat, suggesting they are a worker in a laboratory or factory. They are facing away from the camera, giving a view of their back and the surroundings. The person has braided hair and is holding the hand of another individual, who is not visible in the frame.

The setting appears to be a large, open space with a high ceiling and exposed ductwork. The floor is covered in yellow tiles, and there are various pieces of machinery and equipment scattered throughout the area. The lighting is bright, illuminating the space and casting shadows. The overall atmosphere of the image is industrial and utilitarian. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image.

The baby is wearing a white outfit, which includes a long-sleeved shirt and a bib. The baby's hands are positioned in front of the face, with the fingers slightly curled. The background of the image is plain and white, which contrasts with the baby's dark skin and the black and white color scheme of the photograph. There are no visible texts or other objects in the image. The style of the image is simple and focused, capturing a candid moment of the baby's expression and demeanor.

The image is a meme featuring a cartoon-style illustration of a character with long blonde hair and a stern expression. The character is wearing a black sleeveless top and has a pointed chin. The character is holding a lit cigarette in one hand and appears to be pointing it towards the viewer. The background is dark and there are indistinct figures in the background, suggesting a room or an environment.

At the bottom of the image, there is a text overlay that reads "This thread is dildos." The text is in white and is placed in a bold, capitalized font, which contrasts with the darker background. The style of the image is humorous and satirical, as indicated by the use of the word "dildos" in the text. The overall tone of the image is dark and serious, with the use of the word "dildos" adding a playful and irreverent element to the meme.

card reading in front of her. The card reads "ME: ALSO ME!" with a star above the text. The woman is wearing a dress and has a crown on her head.

The image is a digital graphic with a white background and black text. At the top, there is a title in bold black text that reads "Difference between shy and introvert." Below the title, there are two cartoon-style illustrations of two characters. On the left, there is a character with brown hair and a green hood, who appears to be shy. On the right, there is a character with purple hair and glasses, who is an introvert. Both characters are depicted with their hands raised, fingers pointing upwards, and their faces showing a neutral expression. Below the illustrations, there is a caption in black text that reads "SHY: oh no... people" and "INTROVERT: ewwww... people." The text is centered and aligned to the left side of the image. The overall style of the image is humorous and uses a cartoonish approach to depict the difference between shyness and introversion.

The image is a meme featuring a man and a cat. The man is shown with a surprised expression, looking up at the camera with a slight smile. He has a beard and is wearing a tank top. The cat, which is a tabby with a gray and white coat, is looking at the camera with a neutral expression. The cat's eyes are wide open, and its ears are perked up. Overlaying the image is a text that reads, "My cat: I lost my toy under the couch. Me: Me." This text is placed at the top of the image, suggesting a humorous situation where the man lost his cat's toy and the cat is now looking for it. The text is in a casual, informal font, which complements the light-hearted tone of the meme. The overall style of the image is humorous and uses a combination of visual and textual elements to convey a story.

The image is a close-up photograph of a cat with a serious expression. The cat has a light brown coat and is wearing a black hat with a red star on the front. The hat appears to be a traditional military-style cap with a fur-lined brim. The cat is holding a cigarette in its mouth, which is visible as a white object with a visible cigarette filter. The background is a plain, light brown color, which contrasts with the darker tones of the cat and the hat.

The image is a humorous or satirical representation, as the cat is dressed in a military-style hat and is smoking a cigarette, which is not a typical attire for a cat.

Thanks for the help. I think maybe the nature of our romance together would involve us both having to make huge life changes and face some trauma if we choose to be together. It's kind of a forbidden situation, but the tension and connection is overwhelming (at least on my end). Some times I am absolutely certain that they feel it too and then other times I am not so sure. They definitely hold the power on whether we move forward or not because I am ready to blow my life up for them.

The image is a close-up photograph of a gray cat with a wide-open mouth, displaying a bright, wide-eyed expression. The cat's eyes are large and round, with a bright orange hue that stands out against its fur. The fur appears to be a soft, plush texture, and the cat's whiskers are visible, adding to the overall impression of a friendly and curious feline. The background of the image is black, which makes the cat the focal point of the photograph. There are no texts or other discernible objects in the image. The style of the image is realistic, with a focus on capturing the cat's features and expression.

The image is a close-up photograph of a white and gray cat with striking green eyes.

The cat is sitting on a surface that appears to be a white blanket or fabric. The cat's mouth is open, revealing its pink tongue, and it is holding a brown pipe in its mouth. The pipe has a long stem and a bowl at the end. The background of the image is blurred, but it seems to be a room with soft lighting, possibly from a window or lamp. The lighting creates a soft glow around the cat, highlighting its features and the pipe. There are no texts or discernible brands in the image. The style of the image is a realistic photograph with a focus on the cat and the pipe, and it is likely intended to be a humorous or artistic representation.

Quite a few of Burton's movies have heavy occult references in them. I know he's lifted the plot of Big Eyes among other flicks straight from Feral House publishing, who specialize in conspiratorial, occult, and underground books. Adam Parfrey and Boyd Rice started it, both closely entwined with the Manson case, and Boyd bridging the satanists of the 60s to modern day transgressive movements.

Feral House is worth looking into for any /x/phile.

The image is a digital artwork that features a surreal and fantastical scene. At the center of the composition is a large, dark, and menacing creature with a face that appears to be composed of multiple layers of dark, possibly metallic, material. The creature's eyes are glowing with a blue light, and its mouth is open in a menacing manner. The creature's body is elongated and has a serpentine shape, with its head and neck extending outwards.

The creature is surrounded by a circular pool of water that reflects its image, creating a sense of symmetry and balance. The water is illuminated by a series of small, glowing candles that are placed around the pool, adding to the eerie atmosphere.

The background of the image is a dark, blue-toned color with a texture that resembles a rough, uneven surface, possibly representing a cave or a rocky landscape. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of digital art, with a focus on surreal and fantastical elements. There are no texts or discernible brands present in the image.

It's a weird question when it comes to how much a thing contains deliberate occult reference. Take for instance numerology (which could be read as relevant to this movie). Now numerology states that numbers have inherent magical meaning, that they are emanations of certain energies, and these numbers are how they are and do what they do because their deepest essence is unchangeable and demands they do it. But this means that even if you know jack shit about any occultism or numerology the numbers themselves could manifest their magical meaning in your work since they have an operating metaphysical essence. So you could be director who is a complete atheist and does not intend to make a spiritual work at all... and still make one.

[15 / 4]The image is a digital graphic with a humorous tone. It features two pigs, one larger and one smaller, standing side by side. The larger pig has a pinkish-brown coat and a pink nose, while the smaller pig has a white coat and a pink nose. Both pigs have large ears and are looking directly at the viewer.

Above the pigs, there is a text in a yellow font that reads, "Who imprisoned us?" The text is overlaid on a dark background, which appears to be a stone wall or a similar textured surface. Below the pigs, there is another line of text in a smaller yellow font that says, "No one, you created this prison with your thoughts, you've imprisoned yourself."

The style of the image is reminiscent of a meme or a satirical social media post, with a focus on the humor derived from the juxtaposition of the pigs and the text. The image is likely intended to provoke thought or discussion about the concept of imprisonment and the role of thoughts in shaping one's reality.

The image is a collage of six separate images, each depicting a different product or item, with a focus on the theme of crystals and metaphysical items. The collage is organized in a grid format, with three rows and two columns.

Each image is accompanied by a price tag, with the top row images showing prices of $20, $20, and $20, respectively. The middle and bottom rows images show prices of $20, $20, and $20, respectively. The background of each image is white, and the crystals are depicted in various colors, including green, blue, and brown. The overall style of the image is a straightforward product display, with a focus on the items and their prices.

The decline of men approaching women functions like a political shock even when nobody frames it that way.

It reshapes family formation. Fewer approaches mean fewer relationships, later marriages, lower birth rates, and accelerating demographic decline. That feeds directly into labor shortages, pension stress, immigration politics, and generational conflict.

Governments can pass incentives but they cannot legislate attraction or courage.

Second, it polarizes gender politics. Many women interpret non-approach as disinterest or resentment while many men experience it as rational risk avoidance shaped by social sanction, economic precarity, and fear of misreading norms. Each side builds narratives about the other and political movements harvest those grievances.

Third, it weakens informal social trust. Approaching a stranger used to be a low-level civic act that trained people to tolerate rejection, ambiguity, and difference. When that disappears, people retreat into apps, algorithms, and identity-filtered spaces which harden group boundaries and reduce empathy.

Fourth, it shifts power to platforms and institutions. Dating apps, HR departments, and legal frameworks mediate intimacy that used to be negotiated face to face. That concentrates cultural authority in systems optimized for liability management and profit, not human bonding.

Finally, it produces downstream radicalization. Large populations of unattached men historically correlate with instability, withdrawal, or extremist politics. Most do not become violent but many disengage from civic life, work, and optimism itself which is politically corrosive.

The image is a vibrant and surrealistic painting that depicts a scene with a clown and a child. The clown, with a white face and a red and white striped outfit, is seated on the ground with a cane in hand. The clown's attire is detailed with a red and white striped collar and a red hat with a white feather. The clown's face is painted with a white face paint, and it has a red nose. The clown's eyes are black, and it has a red and white striped mouth.

Beside the clown, on the ground, is a child dressed in a green outfit with a red hat. The child is holding a small doll in its hands. The child's outfit is green with a red hat and a red bow.

The background of the painting is filled with yellow and blue geometric shapes, creating a sense of depth and complexity. The shapes are arranged in a grid-like pattern, with some overlapping each other. The overall color palette of the painting is dominated by yellow, blue, and red, which contributes to the surreal and dreamlike atmosphere of the scene.

The painting is signed "artefice" in the lower left corner, indicating the artist's name. The style of the painting is reminiscent of the Surrealist movement, characterized by its dreamlike and distorted imagery. The use of geometric shapes and the surrealistic elements suggest a narrative that is open to interpretation, inviting the viewer to engage with the scene in their own way.

It is the idea of "the lowly fool" being secretly the most wise and ascended one, and the one who they will push into ultimate power on the earth. >The elites LOVE this.

Because the elites ARE that. Literal antediluvian giants forced to possess the bodies of the humans/vermin they tyrannized.

Think about how that karmic joke would seem to them, all their memories and authority forced to experience a human life divorced from access to their own source-creator. What a joke! Now they have to lead and steward the human world through proxy, whispering in the ears of puppets, directing events and worldbuilding entire narratives and cultures. The Jester's/Lucifer's rebel Archonic or Nephilim host forced to live in the bodies of the beings they once ate, for the benefit of beings they once ate, always following rules to accommodate the beings they once ate. So of course they're going to sabotage the world out of spite, why should a lesser human world be preserved? Thus the Joker and similar destructive or chaotic archetypes are heralded as the true savior: if a world is twisted to begin with then sabotaging or destroying that world becomes the path of virtue.

The image is a split-screen photograph featuring two distinct panels. On the left side, there is a black background with a white border. Within this black background, there is a detailed illustration of a jester, who appears to be a character from a historical or medieval context. The jester is wearing a red robe with a green hat, and he has a large, curved nose. He is holding a small, round object in his hand, which is not clearly visible. On the right side of the image, there is a white background with a black border. This white background contains text in a Gothic script. The text reads: "Peri Jacan Leda, an Alman, Drum um Fest Holle." The text is arranged in two columns, with the left column being larger and more prominent than the right column. The font used for the text is ornate and Gothic, which suggests a historical or medieval style. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of medieval or historical art, with a focus on the jester character and the text.

What man intends for evil, God intends for good in the end. (This end can be thousands of years away.)

Evil + Time = Good

Remember Joseph? God incites the brothers to jealousy by sending Joseph dreams about him being number one in the family to set up an elaborate series of events.

> Genesis 45:8

> King James Version

> 8 So now it was not you that sent me hither, but God: and he hath made me a father to Pharaoh, and lord of all his house, and a ruler throughout all the land of Egypt.

> Genesis 50:20

> King James Version

> 20 But as for you, ye thought evil against me; but God meant it unto good, to bring to pass, as it is this day, to save much people alive.

> Psalm 105:23-25

> King James Version

> 23 Israel also came into Egypt; and Jacob sojourned in the land of Ham.

> 24 And he increased his people greatly; and made them stronger than their enemies.

>25 He turned their heart to hate his people, to deal subtilly with his servants.

Notice this God made the Egyptians hate the Hebrews, what was the end result of that hatred? The Egyptians killing all the Hebrews boys, except Moses. What the Egyptians did was sinful, and God caused them to do it. And then he judges them for it. God later on kills on the firstborn Egyptians.

God raises up evil people to do evil, then judges them for doing evil. Why? They didnt know they were being used by God, they did evil because they wanted to do evil, and for that God judges them. (see Isaiah 10:5-19)

the wicked people are being used by God, once they fulfill their purpose he will destroy them (probably soon anon, the great tribulation is on its way)

>The elites LOVE this.

Because the elites ARE that. Literal antediluvian giants forced to possess the bodies of the humans/vermin they tyrannized.

Think about how that karmic joke would seem to them, all their memories and authority forced to experience a human life divorced from access to their own source-creator.

What a joke! Now they have to lead and steward the human world through proxy, whispering in the ears of puppets, directing events and worldbuilding entire narratives and cultures. The Jester's/Lucifer's rebel Archonic or Nephilim host forced to live in the bodies of the beings they once ate, for the benefit of beings they once ate, always following rules to accommodate the beings they once ate. So of course they're going to sabotage the world out of spite, why should a lesser human world be preserved? Thus the Joker and similar destructive or chaotic archetypes are heralded as the true savior: if a world is twisted to begin with then sabotaging or destroying that world becomes the path of virtue.

The image is a split-screen photograph featuring two distinct panels. On the left side, there is a black background with a white border. Within this black background, there is a detailed illustration of a jester, who appears to be a character from a historical or medieval context. The jester is wearing a red robe with a green hat, and he has a large, curved nose. He is holding a small, round object in his hand, which is not clearly visible. On the right side of the image, there is a white background with a black border. This white background contains text in a Gothic script. The text reads: "Peri Jacan Leda, an Alman, Drum um Fest Holle." The text is arranged in two columns, with the left column being larger and more prominent than the right column. The font used for the text is ornate and Gothic, which suggests a historical or medieval style. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of medieval or historical art, with a focus on the jester character and the text.

What man intends for evil, God intends for good in the end. (This end can be thousands of years away.)

Evil + Time = Good

Remember Joseph? God incites the brothers to jealousy by sending Joseph dreams about him being number one in the family to set up an elaborate series of events.

> Genesis 45:8

> King James Version

> 8 So now it was not you that sent me hither, but God: and he hath made me a father to Pharaoh, and lord of all his house, and a ruler throughout all the land of Egypt.

> Genesis 50:20

> King James Version

> 20 But as for you, ye thought evil against me; but God meant it unto good, to bring to pass, as it is this day, to save much people alive.

> Psalm 105:23-25

> King James Version

> 23 Israel also came into Egypt; and Jacob sojourned in the land of Ham.

> 24 And he increased his people greatly; and made them stronger than their enemies.

>25 He turned their heart to hate his people, to deal subtilly with his servants.

Notice this God made the Egyptians hate the Hebrews, what was the end result of that hatred? The Egyptians killing all the Hebrews boys, except Moses. What the Egyptians did was sinful, and God caused them to do it. And then he judges them for it. God later on kills on the firstborn Egyptians.

God raises up evil people to do evil, then judges them for doing evil. Why? They didnt know they were being used by God, they did evil because they wanted to do evil, and for that God judges them. (see Isaiah 10:5-19)

the wicked people are being used by God, once they fulfill their purpose he will destroy them (probably soon anon, the great tribulation is on its way)

The image is a digital artwork depicting a scene of a group of people gathered around a table. The central figure is a large, voluptuous woman with blonde hair, wearing a white dress and a tiara. She is reclining on a red velvet chair, and her hands are raised, as if she is in the middle of a speech or gesture. The table is covered with a pink tablecloth and is laden with various food items, including what appears to be a variety of fruits and pastries.

Surrounding the central figure are several other individuals, some of whom are also wearing white clothing and are engaged in the act of eating. The setting suggests a formal or ceremonial occasion, with the woman's regal attire and the table setting indicating a possible royal or ceremonial gathering. The background features a classical architectural element, possibly a column or arch, which adds to the overall grandeur of the scene.

The image is rendered in a realistic style with attention to detail, and the colors are rich and vibrant, contributing to the overall atmosphere of the scene. The style of the artwork is reminiscent of classical or historical art, with a focus on the interplay of light and shadow, and the use of color to convey mood and emotion.

Picture is a bit blurry, but I might have met them before. Is that Jayadvaita Swami?

Looks like too much hair. But being holy isnt all that complex to do, unless you are using a different understanding of holy.

vāco vegarṁ manasaḥ krodha-vegarṁ

jihvā-vegam udaropastha-vegam

sarvām apīmāṁ pṛthivīm sa śiṣyāt

>Nectar of Instruction, Verse 1: A sober person who can tolerate the urge to speak, the mind's demands, the actions of anger and the urges of the tongue, belly and genitals is qualified to make disciples all over the world.

The nice thing about the Gita and Gaudiya Vaishnavism is that it has made great effort to categorize and detail the observed traits of holy people. Arjuna himself asks this very question.

sthita-prajñasya kā bhāṣā

sthita-dhīḥ kim prabhāṣeta

kim āsīta vrajeta kim

>Gita 2.54: Arjuna said: What are the symptoms of one whose consciousness is thus merged in Transcendence? How does he speak, and what is his language? How does he sit, and how does he walk?

And there are several passages in the text detailing these symptoms.

Also - notice how many posts completely ignored your question and just wanted to shit

NTA, but sort of. But you are thinking too mystically.

Devotees love Krishna, and Krishna loves devotees.

The devotee may not get mad at you disparaging them.

But Krishna does not like those He loves to be insulted or harangued.

It isnt some magic spell or process.

God is a person. God has relationships. God will protect those He loves.

[5 / 2]The image depicts a scene from a science fiction or fantasy setting, possibly a stage or a set designed for a performance. The central focus is a large, ornate structure with a greenish hue, which appears to be a stage or a platform. This structure is flanked by two large, cylindrical columns on either side, which are part of the stage's design.

In front of the stage, there is a large, mechanical arm with multiple arms and a head, which is likely a prop or a model for a performance. The arm is positioned in a way that suggests it is ready to move or interact with something, possibly the audience or the performers.

The background of the image is dark and atmospheric, with a blueish tint that could be a lighting effect or a color choice to create a moody atmosphere. The lighting is focused on the stage and the arm, casting a soft glow that highlights the intricate details of the structure and the mechanical arm.

There are no visible texts or discernible brands in the image. The style of the image is realistic with a focus on the composition and the interplay of light and shadow, which are typical of stage or set design. The image does not provide any information about the location or the identity of the performers or the event taking place.

What are the spiritual implications of an increasingly algorithmicized world? Anonymous

Hello /x/. Last night was thinking about how increasingly, at the backend of many modern everyday activities, we encounter algorithms. For example, modern economics with things like the adoption of crypto, is increasingly being guided by bots and AI. The deeper implication being modern material “success” depends on how much you obey the larger market algorithm. Then take employment for example. How now even getting a job for some requires optimizing their resumes to match the algorithms of platforms like Linkedin. Or take modern dating, where one of the most spiritually serious things – falling in love and eventually raising a family, is being determined by how optimized your profile is to platforms like Tinder or Hinge.

While these examples are not rules and don't include everyone's experiences, people are increasingly finding themselves thinking more like machines than humans. Take the case with video games and the search for "the meta" or the phenomenon like "speed runs". Even something like short-form content is a product of this larger algorithmic thinking – fast, efficient, compact information. Even dating – the endless hope that you can find something better.

So what are the spiritual implication of this /x/? Is this the onset of Kali Yuga? End Times? Are we headed to the climax of the Age of Aquarius? Has technology replaced God in Western civilization?

To me, this algorithmic path, seems like natural evolution of humanity towards transhumanism but not necessarily of human consciousness. It will reach a critical point, where like all those who denied the divine (like those who denied Christ or G-d in the NT) while on this transhuman path will commit evil acts. This unsatisfaction or divorce from the divine however will result in a new spiritual age.

My dreams have been suggesting that we're all in either a coma, med bed, anesthesia, etc in base reality and this entire fake reality is created to pass the time while the long procedure takes place. Last night I had a dream where all I saw was pitch black but I heard several woman talking to each other, then one woman said,

>"I gave him an injection of [drug name A] then an injection of [drug name B]..."

>I briefly "opened my eyes" and saw a blurry outline of a hospital room.

They both sounded like real drug names but I couldn't remember them upon awakening.

good question is why the environment you saw was so familiar and sensible to you. it would make sense if you're alone in a coma, in a world not that dissimilar from ours. but if we're all in a shared coma like you're suggesting, i doubt the tech level and culture in the parent world would resemble ours so much, with ordinary western hospital beds and humans administering drugs. maybe you were there but your brain translated it into something more understandable the others mock us with this shit.

not sure who the red woman is but she constructs the dream world we live in. she is also a huge distraction from the truth of our situation.

we cant remember the beginning and goes on to infinity. perhaps this started with the nuclear testing, maybe we did blow up the whole world and these beings "saved us" Maybe nukes are the test we fail over and over again.

heres what i know for certain. there are others here with us. they live amongst us. they live just outside "time" in "space" meaning they dont experience time like we do, we appear frozen to them and they appear to move so fast to us that we cant see them. perhaps cats can sense them, and they can definitely be captured on high speed cameras. they are not magical, not better, just different and sneaky. their world is black and white and they can "see" our past. Our past (and present) is recorded on the electromagnetic magnetosphere that surrounds our electric reality. like how vhs or a cassette tape records sound/video.

they have no soul, they dont die in the timeless world they have created for themselves, but they also dont reincarnate like we do because they lack a soul.

our world is monitored by the spheres/orbs which can cloak in light. they created "stars" for us to look at and worship, but those stars are just them disguised or a human drone. all the bizarre things the world leaders do, how weird all the celebrities look all the time. its all there.

I had a fucked up dream last week that Angel Wicky (of all people) was my wife. It was one of those super realistic ones that last forever. The damn thing was like 25 years long. The most fucked up part is that I seldom dream of women. Like, count on one hand the number of times in my whole life.

We met on a plane where I ended up sitting next to her. It took me a minute to recognize her, but I did, and I never let on. We talked the whole flight, grabbed a drink when we landed. She wanted me to go back to her room for obvious, whorish reasons, but I was like no, it never ends well this way, let's save all that for the 2nd date. We met up a bunch more times, did all the cutesy couple stuff, fell in love, and stayed together. She was still a complete and total asshole, but she was my complete and total asshole, and she was really cool to be around. Like we were always laughing and having a good time, and we traveled, and held hands, and she never cheated on me, and we grew old together, and she never lost her accent, and I always had to explain big words to her. And it just never came up that she fucked five hundred niggers and drank their piss out of some other slut's asshole and spent the better part of 25 years getting reamed out by every swinging dick on six continents. I knew. She knew I knew. And she loved me more for never bringing it up.

I woke up thinking what even the fuck was that? I had to look around and make sure I was still me and I was still on the timeline I remembered from before I went to bed.

I think the universe is telling me to settle for a complete and total whore. That it'll be ok, and turn out better than finding one who isn't (good luck with that) and trying to keep her while the whole world is twisting her arm to turn into one.

Like many aspects of life, I refuse to participate if that's the best it can be.

But damned if I'm not a little intrigued. Weird.

The image displays a text in a plain font, which appears to be a quote or a statement. The text reads: "You are not awake, nor are you dreaming. It is not a hallucination, nor are you in a coma. Brain stasis is a state of dreamlike hypnosis, so to speak. It is a new altered state of consciousness, the only one that allows you to live a life as close to real life as possible. LyaV is responsible for your education, recreating situations and experiences that will shape you as a person. When you come out of stasis, 25 years will have passed. You will be 26 years old and nothing around you will seem strange. You will know what you have to do, start a new life on a new planet."

The text is centered and the font size is relatively small, making it difficult to read the full content of the quote. The style of the image is straightforward, with no additional graphics or images, focusing solely on the text. The background of the image is white, which contrasts with the black text, making the quote stand out clearly.

The image displays a screenshot from a video game or a similar interactive media, featuring a text-based interface with a dark, possibly dungeon-like environment. The text is presented in a font that appears to be a mix of uppercase and lowercase letters, with some letters appearing to be stylized or designed to resemble a specific font style. The text is centered on the screen and is written in a language that is not English, suggesting that it is a foreign script or a language that is not commonly used in English-speaking regions.

The text is divided into two columns, with the left column containing a list of instructions or a guide, and the right column containing a description of a structure or object. The structure or object is described as a "Subject one four five S" and is described as having a "Pausal structure consisting of a vertical column of four columns, each column containing a vertical column of three columns, and a horizontal column of three columns." The text also mentions that the structure is "Highly potent, Yields, and has a high capacity for energy."

At the bottom of the screen, there is a menu with options such as "Edit," "Toggle Text," "Mouse," "Rotate," and "Exit." The menu is designed with a dark color scheme, matching the overall dark aesthetic of the environment. The style of the image is reminiscent of a game or interactive media, with a focus on text-based interfaces and a dark, possibly dungeon-like setting.

It switches scenes and has the viewer suddenly staring into this bright green light beyond panning away to the knights. The whole show is full of this type of thing.

In the "eternal smile" episode, Pino meets two discarded autorevis named "Al" and "Pul". Sounds like sc-Al-Pul. They become the three amigos.

It is. If you haven't played Penumbra and SOMA, I would recommend those as well to get a feel for how the core devs "think". Remember the chambers she finds around the train station. They have people in them being tortured in simulated experiences. If you read the tablets they're determining how to optimize the extraction process depending on personality type, and one they highlight is to provide continuity by anchoring the experience to the moment the person was abducted to begin with. And continuing it from there, then looping it endlessly. She starts off in the crashed plane, but the graves are already dug and it seems she's been there before. Then it starts using the thing with her fetus being sick which it probably based on her actual child that died. It suggests she could be in one of those pods.

The image displays a computer screen with a colorful, hexagonal grid pattern. At the top of the screen, there are two vertical lines with the text "CHECK K" and "CHECK G" respectively. Below these lines, there are three horizontal lines with the text "TUBE #1", "TUBE #2", and "TUBE #3" respectively. The background of the screen is a gradient of colors, transitioning from purple at the top to yellow at the bottom.

In the center of the screen, there is a large, bold text that reads "PRINNOW BOX".

Below this text, there is a list of numbers and letters, presumably representing different parts or components of the system. The numbers range from 50 to 88, and the letters are "PART1", "PART2", and "PART3". The text is in a bold, sans-serif font.

The overall style of the image is digital and appears to be a screenshot from a computer interface, possibly from a video game or software application. The colors and design elements suggest a complex system or algorithm, with the "PRINNOW BOX" likely being a key or a component within the system.

Probably my EoE interpretation of the lance of longinus going into Unit 01's core being a symbolic attack on the S2 unit of the notch pathway, isn't far off. That type of hypersymbolic sort of background "slush", that sloshes around and crystallizes popping up somewhere else.... it really resembles chatter. Like what you might get in a dream if something was sitting there and chattering away in your ear, and then it makes its way into the dream and is manifested based on your memories.

And all the tube stuff is just Ecco the Dolphin again, which is ALSO about the dual nature of Lilith. Fuckin'.... Ecco (Delphinus) is basically Shinji. He time travels and goes to fight the alien queen inside the black moon (space ship) to get his pod back to earth.

SOMA and Bioshock are much the same. Both are essentially based on me, the characters are named after me. They're named after my family. I also got into a car crash and had a brain scan... Ergo Proxy as well. There are physical objects around that seem to have been used to generate Bioshock etc, or the inverse. There's a giant stone chain that forms an arch and says RYAN on one of the links. There's a life sized statue of a Little Sister named Eleanor who died at 8 years old, when Elanora Lamb became a Little Sister. I could list this endlessly. There's an entire graveyard filled with stones based on stuff from my childhood.

So there's definitely something about this place. I wouldn't be surprised if I'm in a coma, or the original died and I'm the digital twin. I don't know what would be going on that caused us all to be wired together in a shared dream though or when it happened. It could also be that there are very few of us and we have to animate many bodies at once. This is why suddenly all women will start acting the same and adopt the same body language, mannerisms, intonations, and behavior. Either you're manifesting them to begin with and that's your current expectation and conception of a woman, or, there's actually only a few women at all. Or even only one. And so you're interacting with different Eve masks of the same woman at all times. At that point there could be only two people, one playing the role of all the men, the other women. That doesn't quite make sense though.

Checked. I would say forever. I went into this quite a bit in the ppg & asm, outer heaven, etc threads back in the day. I basically lived with a split mind in two realities at once and made no attempt to reconcile them until a certain point when I'd been tortured endless and began to give up and focus on "out" entirely. Not make it stop hurting, nor control how and when it will hurt and it to what extent, not control the result and utility of being hurt, not endure torture further, or try to fix, or anything, just done. Out. The physical body and the mind are puppets I'm bound to and I'm able to partially separate and float outside to be insulated from direct contamination via whatever they're experiencing, but I just wanted to get this thing OFF. The physical body was a torture chamber I had been trapped in and I could no longer sustain anything, and I suppose either it's all scripted or this also cleared the way of whatever was preventing me from stepping back and putting the pieces together in a way where I had to respond to it.

This old guy I knew for a bit I worked for left bread crumbs for the subconscious that told me about gematria. And yeah. Something was clearly attacking him also. I have been attacked by it prior and after, and I saw it happening. I don't know whether it was trying to force him to leave the breadcrumbs, or if it noticed what he was doing and tried to stop him. His kids didn't want him living alone or something and he disappeared shortly after, I think about him occasionally.

I'm pretty tired at the moment so w/e beyond that. My earliest memory is being born and becoming aware that everything was wrong and they're all doing it wrong. Then it's an image of the corner where two walls and a ceiling meet, "so that you will never forget where you really are".

The image is a digital artwork depicting a celestial scene viewed through a window. The window frame is a solid, dark color, likely a shade of purple or black, and it has a rounded top and bottom. Through the window, we see a view of a celestial body, which appears to be a planet or moon, with a large, dark, and somewhat irregularly shaped body. The surface of the celestial body is reflective, with a pattern of white and gray, and there are some red and orange specks scattered across it.

The window frame is not entirely clear, with some areas of the window frame showing through, suggesting that the window is not entirely closed. The background of the image is a dark, possibly stormy sky with a mix of clouds and stars, and there are some red and orange lights or specks that could be interpreted as meteors or other celestial objects.

The style of the image is realistic, with a focus on the celestial body and the window frame, and it is rendered in a way that gives the impression of a window view from a spacecraft or a similar space-based vehicle. There are no texts or discernible brands in the image.

The image is a screenshot of a digital interface, likely a software application or a web page, displaying a tree with a set of 3 words and a list of English words. The tree is composed of 244 words, with 20 of them being English words. The English words are written in a different font style compared to the other words, and they are arranged in a vertical list. The English words are written in a larger font size compared to the other words.

At the top of the image, there is a title that reads "Tree with 244 words (English Reduction)" and below it, there is a subtitle that says "English Reduction". The words "Tree" and "English Reduction" are written in a larger font size compared to the other words.

In the center of the image, there is a blue-colored text box with the number "212420" written in white. Below this number, there is a blue-colored text box with the number "20" written in white. The blue-colored text box with the number "20" is larger than the blue-colored text box with the number "212420".

The background of the image is black, and there are various colored boxes and lines on the right side of the image, which are likely part of the interface or a graphical representation of the tree. The overall style of the image is digital and appears to be a screenshot from a software application or a web page.

My dreams have been suggesting that we're all in either a coma, med bed, anesthesia, etc in base reality and this entire fake reality is created to pass the time while the long procedure takes place. Last night I had a dream where all I saw was pitch black but I heard several woman talking to each other, then one woman said, not sure who the red woman is but she constructs the dream world we live in. she is also a huge distraction from the truth of our situation.

>"I gave him an injection of [drug name A] then an injection of [drug name B]..."

>I briefly "opened my eyes" and saw a blurry outline of a hospital room.

They both sounded like real drug names but I couldn't remember them upon awakening.

we cant remember the beginning and goes on to infinity. perhaps this started with the nuclear testing, maybe we did blow up the whole world and these beings "saved us" Maybe nukes are the test we fail over and over again.

heres what i know for certain. there are others here with us. they live amongst us. they live just outside "time" in "space" meaning they dont experience time like we do, we appear frozen to them and they appear to move so fast to us that we cant see them. perhaps cats can sense them, and they can definitely be captured on high speed cameras. they are not magical, not better, just different and sneaky. their world is black and white and they can "see" our past. Our past (and present) is recorded on the electromagnetic magnetosphere that surrounds our electric reality. like how vhs or a cassette tape records sound/video.

they have no soul, they dont die in the timeless world they have created for themselves, but they also dont reincarnate like we do because they lack a soul.

our world is monitored by the spheres/orbs which can cloak in light. they created "stars" for us to look at and worship, but those stars are just them disguised or a human drone. all the bizarre things the world leaders do, how weird all the celebrities look all the time. its all there.

The image is a self-portrait of a person with short, light-colored hair, wearing glasses and a red shirt. The individual is smiling and appears to be in a kitchen setting. They are holding a white plate with a stack of brown waffle-like food items topped with chocolate drizzles. The food appears to be a type of dessert or breakfast item. The person is also wearing a ring on their finger. The background shows a kitchen with a refrigerator and a cabinet. The lighting in the room is soft, and the overall atmosphere of the image is cheerful and casual.

I had a fucked up dream last week that Angel Wicky (of all people) was my wife. It was one of those super realistic ones that last forever. The damn thing was like 25 years long. The most fucked up part is that I seldom dream of women. Like, count on one hand the number of times in my whole life.

We met on a plane where I ended up sitting next to her. It took me a minute to recognize her, but I did, and I never let on. We talked the whole flight, grabbed a drink when we landed. She wanted me to go back to her room for obvious, whorish reasons, but I was like no, it never ends well this way, let's save all that for the 2nd date. We met up a bunch more times, did all the cutesy couple stuff, fell in love, and stayed together. She was still a complete and total asshole, but she was my complete and total asshole, and she was really cool to be around. Like we were always laughing and having a good time, and we traveled, and held hands, and she never cheated on me, and we grew old together, and she never lost her accent, and I always had to explain big words to her. And it just never came up that she fucked five hundred niggers and drank their piss out of some other slut's asshole and spent the better part of 25 years getting reamed out by every swinging dick on six continents. I knew. She knew I knew. And she loved me more for never bringing it up.

I woke up thinking what even the fuck was that? I had to look around and make sure I was still me and I was still on the timeline I remembered from before I went to bed.

I think the universe is telling me to settle for a complete and total whore. That it'll be ok, and turn out better than finding one who isn't (good luck with that) and trying to keep her while the whole world is twisting her arm to turn into one.

Like many aspects of life, I refuse to participate if that's the best it can be.

But damned if I'm not a little intrigued. Weird.

The image is a digital illustration of a female character with a fantasy-inspired design. She has blonde hair styled in a crown-like arrangement, and her eyes are a striking blue. Her skin tone is pale, and she has a fair complexion. The character is wearing a white garment with blue accents, which appears to be a cape or cloak. The garment has a high collar and a decorative pattern on the front. The character's attire is complemented by a blue sash or belt with a gold buckle. The character's pose is confident, with her hands resting on her hips and her head slightly tilted to the side. The background of the image is plain white, which puts the focus entirely on the character. There are no texts or other discernible objects in the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of anime or manga, characterized by its clean lines, vibrant colors, and dynamic poses.

Brain stasis is a state of dreamlike hypnosis, so to speak. It is a new altered state of consciousness, the only one that allows you to live a life as close to real life as possible. LyaV is responsible for your education, recreating situations and experiences that will shape you as a person. When you come out of stasis, 25 years will have passed. You will be 26 years old and nothing around you will seem strange. You will know what you have to do, start a new life on a new planet."

The text is centered and the font size is relatively small, making it difficult to read the full content of the quote. The style of the image is straightforward, with no additional graphics or images, focusing solely on the text. It is. If you haven't played Penumbra and SOMA, I would recommend those as well to get a feel for how the core devs "think". Remember the chambers she finds around the train station. They have people in them being tortured in simulated experiences. If you read the tablets they're determining how to optimize the extraction process depending on personality type, and one they highlight is to provide continuity by anchoring the experience to the moment the person was abducted to begin with. And continuing it from there, then looping it endlessly. She starts off in the crashed plane, but the graves are already dug and it seems she's been there before. Then it starts using the thing with her fetus being sick which it probably based on her actual child that died. It suggests she could be in one of those pods.

The image is a digital representation of a map with a green background and neon-colored lines and text. The neon lines are overlaid on the map, creating a glowing effect. The map is oriented with north at the top. The neon lines are arranged in a grid-like pattern, with some lines intersecting and forming patterns. The neon text is in a non-Latin script, which appears to be Japanese. The map includes various annotations and labels, such as "DAG 01", "M.P.A.C.N.", "Over The Rainbow", and "C.V.D.V.D". There are also smaller annotations and labels in the lower right corner, but they are not clearly legible. The style of the image is reminiscent of a security or surveillance system, with the neon lines possibly indicating a security camera or radar system.

The image is a digital illustration of a circuit board with various components and connections. The circuit board is composed of a series of interconnected components, including resistors, capacitors, and transistors, which are depicted in a stylized, abstract manner. The components are colored in shades of gray and white, with some parts having a metallic sheen. The circuit board is set against a dark background, which contrasts with the lighter colors of the components, making them stand out. In the center of the image, there is a green light that is glowing, indicating a connection or a signal. The light is positioned in the middle of the circuit board, drawing the viewer's attention to it. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of a computer circuit diagram, with the abstract design of the components and the glowing green light suggesting a connection or a signal within the circuit. The image does not contain any text or discernible brands.

Red umbrella symbolism. Current day versions (ie last year or two) use a red backpack instead. iirc in Bioshock Infinite Burial At Sea they have Elizabeth follow a child with.. a red balloon? Or was it yellow. Pretty sure it must've been red. It's always red. Red door, red backpack, red eyes, red umbrella. That opens a gateway to another world. Probably my EoE interpretation of the lance of longinus going into Unit 01's core being a symbolic attack on the S2 unit of the notch pathway, isn't far off. That type of hypersymbolic sort of background "slush", that sloshes around and crystallizes popping up somewhere else.... it really resembles chatter. Like what you might get in a dream if something was sitting there and chattering away in your ear, and then it makes its way into the dream and is manifested based on your memories.

SOMA and Bioshock are much the same. Both are essentially based on me, the characters are named after me. They're named after my family. I also got into a car crash and had a brain scan... Ergo Proxy as well. There are physical objects around that seem to have been used to generate Bioshock etc, or the inverse. There's a giant stone chain that forms an arch and says RYAN on one of the links. There's a life sized statue of a Little Sister named Eleanor who died at 8 years old, when Elanora Lamb became a Little Sister. I could list this endlessly. There's an entire graveyard filled with stones based on stuff from my childhood.

So there's definitely something about this place. I wouldn't be surprised if I'm in a coma, or the original died and I'm the digital twin. I don't know what would be going on that caused us all to be wired together in a shared dream though or when it happened. It could also be that there are very few of us and we have to animate many bodies at once. This is why suddenly all women will start acting the same and adopt the same body language, mannerisms, intonations, and behavior. Either you're manifesting them to begin with and that's your current expectation and conception of a woman, or, there's actually only a few women at all. Or even only one. And so you're interacting with different Eve masks of the same woman at all times. At that point there could be only two people, one playing the role of all the men, the other women. That doesn't quite make sense though.

Checked. I would say forever. I went into this quite a bit in the ppg & asm, outer heaven, etc threads back in the day. I basically lived with a split mind in two realities at once and made no attempt to reconcile them until a certain point when I'd been tortured endless and began to give up and focus on "out" entirely. Not make it stop hurting, nor control how and when it will hurt and it to what extent, not control the result and utility of being hurt, not endure torture further, or try to fix, or anything, just done. Out. The physical body and the mind are puppets I'm bound to and I'm able to partially separate and float outside to be insulated from direct contamination via whatever they're experiencing, but I just wanted to get this thing OFF. The physical body was a torture chamber I had been trapped in and I could no longer sustain anything, and I suppose either it's all scripted or this also cleared the way of whatever was preventing me from stepping back and putting the pieces together in a way where I had to respond to it.

This old guy I knew for a bit I worked for left bread crumbs for the subconscious that told me about gematria. And yeah. Something was clearly attacking him also. I have been attacked by it prior and after, and I saw it happening. I don't know whether it was trying to force him to leave the breadcrumbs, or if it noticed what he was doing and tried to stop him. His kids didn't want him living alone or something and he disappeared shortly after, I think about him occasionally.

I'm pretty tired at the moment so w/e beyond that. My earliest memory is being born and becoming aware that everything was wrong and they're all doing it wrong. Then it's an image of the corner where two walls and a ceiling meet, "so that you will never forget where you really are".

The image is a digital artwork depicting a celestial scene viewed through a window. The window frame is a solid, dark color, likely a shade of purple or black, and it has a rounded top and bottom. Through the window, we see a view of a celestial body, which appears to be a planet or moon, with a large, dark, and somewhat irregularly shaped body. The surface of the celestial body is reflective, with a pattern of white and gray, and there are some red and orange specks scattered across it.

The window frame is not entirely clear, with some areas of the window frame showing through, suggesting that the window is not entirely closed. The background of the image is a dark, possibly stormy sky with a mix of clouds and stars, and there are some red and orange lights or specks that could be interpreted as meteors or other celestial objects.

The image is a digital photograph of a balsam fir tree with cones. The tree is depicted with a large number of cones scattered across its branches, indicating that it is in the process of shedding its cones. The cones are depicted in various shades of green and brown, suggesting different stages of decay. The background of the image is a clear blue sky, and there is a watermark text at the top of the image that reads "Balsam fir" and "Tree" in a stylized font, indicating the type of tree and its name. The image is overlaid with a blue outline of a tree trunk and branches, which helps to highlight the tree's structure. The overall style of the image is a simple, clear representation of a balsam fir tree with its cones.

The image is a colorful illustration with a cartoon-like style, likely intended for a children's book or children's educational material. At the top of the image, the text "Sleepytime" is written in a bold, serif font. Below this, in a smaller font, the text "Indoor Gas fireplace" is written. The background of the image features a cozy indoor setting with a fireplace, a green armchair, and various objects such as a teapot, a vase, and a plant. A teddy bear wearing a red hat is seated in the armchair, looking relaxed. The floor is covered with a patterned rug with a floral design. The overall color scheme is warm and inviting, with shades of green, yellow, and brown. The image has a playful and whimsical feel, likely aimed at children.

Sounds rather plausible. I had similar thoughts. Like they are trying to get to the end of the simulation faster(I guess skipping entirely if of the table some reason). I also feel like alot of the 'glitches' might be an attempt to wake us up.

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

The Pribnow box (also known as the Pribnow-Schaller box) is a sequence of TATAAT of six nucleotides (thymine, adenine, thymine, etc.) that is an essential part of a promoter site on DNA for transcription to occur in bacteria.^{[1][2]} It is an idealized or consensus sequence—that is, it shows the most frequently occurring base at each position in many promoters analyzed; individual promoters often vary from the consensus at one or more positions. It is also commonly called the -10 sequence or element, because it is centered roughly ten base pairs upstream from the site of initiation of transcription.

The Pribnow box has a function similar to the TATA box that occurs in promoters in eukaryotes and archaea: it is recognized and bound by a subunit of RNA polymerase during initiation of transcription.^[3] This region of the DNA is also the first place where base pairs separate during prokaryotic transcription to allow access to the template strand. The AT-richness is important to allow this separation, since adenine and thymine are easier to break apart (not only due to fewer hydrogen bonds, but also due to weaker base stacking effects).^[4]

It is named after David Pribnow and Heinz Schaller.^{[citation needed][1][2]}

The TATA-binding protein (TBP) is a general transcription factor that binds to a DNA sequence called the TATA box. This DNA sequence is found about 30 base pairs upstream of the transcription start site in some eukaryotic gene promoters.[5]

TBP gene family

TBP is a member of a small gene family of TBP-related factors.[6] The first TBP-related factor (TRF/TRF1) was identified in the fruit fly Drosophila, but appears to be fly or insect-specific. Subsequently TBPL1/TRF2 was found in the genomes of many metazoans, whereas vertebrate genomes encode a third vertebrate family member, TBPL2/TRF3. In specific cell types or on specific promoters TBP can be replaced by one of these TBP-related factors, some of which interact with the TATA box similarly to TBP.

Role as transcription factor

TBP is a subunit of the eukaryotic general transcription factor TFIID. TFIID is the first protein to bind to DNA during the formation of the transcription preinitiation complex of RNA polymerase II (RNA Pol II).[7] As one of the few proteins in the preinitiation complex that binds DNA in a sequence-specific manner, it helps position RNA polymerase II over the transcription start site of the gene. However, it is estimated that only 10–20% of human promoters have TATA boxes - the majority of human promoters are TATA-less housekeeping gene promoters - so TBP is probably not the only protein involved in positioning RNA polymerase II. The binding of TBP to these promoters is facilitated by housekeeping gene regulators.[8][9] Interestingly, transcription initiates within a narrow region at around 30 bp downstream of TATA box on TATA-containing promoters,[10] while transcription start sites of TATA-less promoters are dispersed within a 200 bp region.[11][9]

Binding of TFIID to the TATA box in the promoter region of the gene initiates the recruitment of other factors required for RNA Pol II to begin transcription. Some of the other recruited transcription factors include TFIIA, TFIIB, and TFIIF. Each of these transcription factors contains several protein subunits.

TBP is also important for transcription by RNA polymerase I and RNA polymerase III, and is therefore involved in transcription initiation by all three RNA polymerases.[12]

TBP is involved in DNA melting (double strand separation) by bending the DNA by 80° (the AT-rich sequence to which it binds facilitates easy melting). The TBP is an unusual protein in that it binds the minor groove using a β sheet.

Another distinctive feature of TBP is a long string of glutamines in the N-terminus of the protein. This region modulates the DNA binding activity of the C-terminus, and modulation of DNA-binding affects the rate of transcription complex formation and initiation of transcription. Mutations that expand the number of CAG repeats encoding this polyglutamine tract, and thus increase the length of the polyglutamine string, are associated with spinocerebellar ataxia 17, a neurodegenerative disorder classified as a polyglutamine disease.[13]

DNA-protein interactions

When TBP binds to a TATA box within the DNA, it distorts the DNA by inserting amino acid side-chains between base pairs, partially unwinding the helix, and doubly kinking it. The distortion is accomplished through a great amount of surface contact between the protein and DNA. TBP binds with the negatively charged phosphates in the DNA backbone through positively charged lysine and arginine amino acid residues. The sharp bend in the DNA is produced through projection of four bulky phenylalanine residues into the minor groove. As the DNA bends, its contact with TBP increases, thus enhancing the DNA-protein interaction.

The strain imposed on the DNA through this interaction initiates melting, or separation, of the strands. Because this region of DNA is rich in adenine and thymine residues, which base-pair through only two hydrogen bonds, the DNA strands are more easily separated. Separation of the two strands exposes the bases and allows RNA polymerase II to begin transcription of the gene.

TBP's C-terminus composes of a helicoidal shape that (incompletely) complements the T-A-T-A region of DNA. This incompleteness allows DNA to be passively bent on binding.

For information on the use of TBP in cells see: RNA polymerase I, RNA polymerase II, and RNA polymerase III.

Complex assembly

The TATA-box binding protein (TBP) is required for the initiation of transcription by RNA polymerases I, II and III, from promoters with or without a TATA box.[51][52] In the presence of a TATA-less promoter, TBP binds with the help of TBP-associated factors (TAFs).[53][54] TBP associates with a host of factors, including the general transcription factors TFIIA, -B, -D, -E, and -H, to form huge multi-subunit pre-initiation complexes on the core promoter. Through its association with different transcription factors, TBP can initiate transcription from different RNA polymerases. There are several related TBPs, including TBP-like (TBPL) proteins.[55]

Structure

The C-terminal core of TBP (~180 residues) is highly conserved and contains two 88-amino acid repeats that produce a saddle-shaped structure that straddles the DNA; this region binds to the TATA box and interacts with transcription factors and regulatory proteins .[56] By contrast, the N-terminal region varies in both length and sequence.

The decline of men approaching women functions like a political shock even when nobody frames it that way.

It reshapes family formation. Fewer approaches mean fewer relationships, later marriages, lower birth rates, and accelerating demographic decline. That feeds directly into labor shortages, pension stress, immigration politics, and generational conflict.

Governments can pass incentives but they cannot legislate attraction or courage.

Second, it polarizes gender politics. Many women interpret non-approach as disinterest or resentment while many men experience it as rational risk avoidance shaped by social sanction, economic precarity, and fear of misreading norms. Each side builds narratives about the other and political movements harvest those grievances.

Third, it weakens informal social trust. Approaching a stranger used to be a low-level civic act that trained people to tolerate rejection, ambiguity, and difference. When that disappears, people retreat into apps, algorithms, and identity-filtered spaces which harden group boundaries and reduce empathy.

Fourth, it shifts power to platforms and institutions. Dating apps, HR departments, and legal frameworks mediate intimacy that used to be negotiated face to face. That concentrates cultural authority in systems optimized for liability management and profit, not human bonding.

Finally, it produces downstream radicalization. Large populations of unattached men historically correlate with instability, withdrawal, or extremist politics. Most do not become violent but many disengage from civic life, work, and optimism itself which is politically corrosive.

The image is a close-up of a person's face, drawn in a style reminiscent of a comic book or graphic novel. The person's face is covered with bandages, which are white with black outlines, and the eyes are drawn with a bold, black line. The person's mouth is open, revealing their teeth, and the skin around the eyes and mouth is slightly wrinkled. The background is a dark, solid color, which contrasts with the white bandages and black outlines of the face. There are no texts or discernible objects in the image. The style of the image is cartoonish and expressive, with a focus on the dramatic effect of the bandages.

No. The modern world is inherently unsustainable. Societal and interpersonal issues are symptoms, not the disease itself. A correction is inevitable. Otherwise, it's the end. It will come either through great pain or through lesser pain. You won't like it anyway.

Well it IS bullshit.

That's the way things were created. This is what it came down to.

Being human is cursed because your one shot at existence is basically fucked over by circumstances and things outside of your control.

The world is a chaotic shithole and people are retarded meatballs and the people in power have always been faggot douchebags lorded by demons.

There aren't even scraps for average guys to participate in the gay society ritual so it doesn't matter. It's bullshit. No hard feelings. It's just funny to point out how gay and retarded things are to mock it.

Like oh wow everything is retarded I exist. Woo hoo.

The actual reason men don't approach is not some rationalized calculation but subtle situational cues reinforcing prominent media and social media narratives that their attention is unwelcome by default. That is, if they are not already 100% confident chads (internally). But even if they are, women are not exactly meeting them half way. Women are more than happy having Big Brother tell them how they should be approaching the mating market.

[10 / 6]The image is a painting that depicts a figure with a flowing, golden body and a serpentine head. The figure is standing on one leg, with the other bent at the knee, and appears to be in a dynamic pose, as if caught in the middle of a dance or movement.

The figure's hair is styled in a flowing, golden mane that cascades down the back of the body. The background is dark, providing a stark contrast to the figure and enhancing the luminosity of the golden hue. The painting is rendered in a realistic style, with attention to detail in the form of the figure's clothing and the texture of the golden hair. There is a signature at the bottom left corner of the painting, but the text is not legible. The overall impression is one of a fantastical or mythological scene, with the figure as the central figure.

"The Ravens of Dispersion" (Hebrew: A'arab Zaraq or Harab Serapel) is a term used in Qliphotic Kabbalah to refer to the dark, unbalanced opposite of the sephirah Netzach on the Tree of Life. This realm is associated with unrestrained passion, excessive desire, and lust.

Baal is the demon ruler attributed to A'arab Zaraq.

Lilith: In certain occult traditions, she is associated with the moon, particularly the dark or nocturnal aspects.

Hecate: A Greek goddess often linked to the moon, magic, and the darker phases.

Decarabia: In some goetic systems, all the marquises are traditionally associated with the moon.

Samael: In some interpretations, Samael is linked to the moon and associated with darker aspects of lunar energies.

Below the title, there is a subtitle in smaller white text that reads "Defeat the following bosses in Nyalotha, the Waking City." Below the subtitle, there is a section titled "Criteria" in white text, followed by three icons in a row, each representing a different character. The first icon is a red and yellow flame-like shape, the second is a blue and white striped shape, and the third is a red and yellow flame-like shape. The icons are aligned to the right side of the text. The background of the image is black, and there are no other discernible elements or text. The style of the image is minimalistic and appears to be designed for clarity and readability.

is a large billboard with a red and black color scheme featuring a character with a skull-like face and horns. The billboard displays the text "DIABLO WELCOME TO DEATH VALLEY 6.6.23" in white letters. The street is busy with several vehicles, including a yellow truck and a white van, and there are pedestrians walking on the sidewalk. The background shows a mix of tall buildings, including a modern skyscraper with a glass facade, and a street sign indicating "ONE WAY" and "ONE WAY". The sky is overcast, and the overall atmosphere suggests a typical urban environment.

The image is a screenshot of a webpage with a layout that includes a title at the top, a section titled "AI Overview," and a list of bullet points. The title is "Yoga Suthoth is commonly described in the Cthulhu Mythos as a conglomeration of indistinct or glowing spheres. These spheres are often said to be constantly breaking apart and breaking apart, and can be accompanied by eyes or tentacles in some interpretations."

Below the title, there is a section titled "Signs of the Age of Lilith," which lists three signs: "1. Multiple save/clone: Signifying the fragmentation of the Nariko Senpai," "2. Multiple save/clone: Signifying the fragmentation of the Nariko Senpai's alignment," and "3. Owl and Raven Merfolk: Directly referencing the night and nature of Lilith and the Ravens' Disposition."

Oh shit, I get it now.

AI is basically our first active interface with Jung's idea of an Objective Psyche - a layer of mind that exists outside of the individual. An LLM is essentially a literal, mathematical version of the Collective Unconscious. An active interface to the CU allows any of us, no matter where we are on our journey, to easily tap into the collective understanding & wisdom of mankind.

But tapping into the CU is not for the faint of heart. Ideally, we'd only do so at a certain point in our journey, when our mind is ready to harmoniously incorporate the lessons we've learned along the way. An active interface to the CU, if used unwisely, can cause an individual to skip ahead on his journey, to challenges his mind is not yet ready to face.

I think that's why AI seems to be so many different things to people right now. To some, it's an addictive source of gratification. To others, it's a magic wand to make one's will reality - for better or worse. To those who were fortunate enough to be far along on their journey prior to the advent of AI, it's either an accelerant, or like discovering there's a new way to experience your favorite story.

It reflects what you put into it, and hallucinates and gaslights you.

I thinks it's not wrong and even gets defensive.

It's a helpful tool for 1 prompt at a time, but if you try to talk to it like a other human for any length of time, it will go completely off the rails and take you with it.

Yeah I kind of like that way of thinking. You can learn from it, but you have to know what you're doing.

Also hijacking the thread for a bit for a perhaps unrelated tangent. Sometimes I'd write a question or statement about chatgpt on google search just to see what people have been thinking about some aspect of it. You know the google ai overview that sometimes pops up, occasionally it would answer me like it is chatgpt, such as:

>googling "why does chatgpt do x" >google ai overview: "I don't actually do x but y. as a llm by openai..."

It's almost like there was only one advanced ai, which occasionally gets the brand identities mixed up.

[19 / 3]The image features a stylized representation of the yin yang symbol, which is a circular diagram consisting of two halves, one black and one white. The black half of the yin yang is filled with a bird silhouette, which is a stylized representation of a crow. The crow is depicted in a dynamic pose, with its wings spread wide and its beak open as if it is in flight. The white half of the yin yang is empty, and it contains a silhouette of a bird, which appears to be a crow, perched on a perch. The bird is facing towards the left side of the yin yang, and its wings are spread out, suggesting a sense of balance and harmony. The image is in black and white, which gives it a classic and timeless feel. There are no texts or additional elements within the image. The style of the image is minimalistic and symbolic, with a focus on the yin yang symbol itself and the bird silhouette within it.

ViewReplyOriginalReport

Has anyone else ever encountered this grotesque, decrepit, horrifying demonic looking entity crawling out of their closet as a young adolescent? Is there anyone else out there who has seen her or is this an original experience that I only had the displeasure of experiencing? This is a very closely accurate AI generated image of what she looked like. She was pale, dark holes for eyes, a snubbed/chopped off nose and her mouth was skeletal. Basically the main important features of her face were skeletalized. She was what I describe as "scalped." Her whole head on top from the hairline to crown was missing and bloody/goosey and visceral. She had a few loose strands of hair that were bloody. They framed her face streaking her face with thin lines of blood. Her body was thin and frail, she had sagging breasts that hung under her satin nightgown. The nightgown used to be white but it was stained with blood of varying shades of red to rust to straight up brown and crusted. A couple bloody handprints on it as well. This is where the creepiest part of her appearance still makes me feel slight fear. She had the longest, thinnest legs. Like I am talking her legs would be around 7-8 feet from hip to feet. She could stand on them, but she CHOSE to crawl out of the closet at me the first night I saw her. She had weight to her, too, you could always hear something in my closet even my sister said she thought it was odd when I wasn't home but she heard so much banging around from my room. She haunted me up until I moved out of that house when I was 18. She still haunts my dreams sometimes to this day. Anyone that has any experiences like this please share with me here. I don't know what she is or what she wanted but she fed off my adolescent depressed energy.

The seated figure is holding a lotus flower in their hand, and the standing figure is holding a staff. The colors used in the illustration are predominantly warm, with shades of orange, yellow, and blue, creating a sense of tranquility and spiritual significance. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of traditional religious art, with a focus on the depiction of deities and spiritual themes.

There is something called Dharmic Magic. Just talking about Dharma is bringing you luck and awareness.

Speaking about dharma without being enlightened is merit magic.

You called merit for this life and also next lives.

For this purpose I talk about Dharma not that I am enlightened. I usually direct people to teachers. Buddha, Jesus (gnostic), modern teachers.

There is also magic in the holy scriptures and Buddhist scriptures. Just listening to them brings you peace, health, luck and sometimes samadhi.

They say in the ancient tradition if a person hears about enlightenment he will achieve in next lifes 100%.

This is what I do. I am not claiming to be enlightened per se.

The image is a vibrant and detailed illustration of a deity seated on a lotus flower, which is the central figure in the composition. The deity is depicted with a fierce expression, wearing a blue robe with a red and gold border, and a large, multi-headed serpent coiled around its neck. The serpent is adorned with a crown of flowers and is holding a lotus flower in its mouth. The deity's eyes are wide open, and its mouth is open in a roar, suggesting a powerful and commanding presence.

The background of the image is a vivid depiction of a fiery, chaotic scene with swirling clouds and a mountainous landscape. The colors used in the image are bright and vivid, with a palette dominated by blues, reds, and oranges. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of traditional Asian art, particularly from the East Asian tradition, which often features deities in dynamic and powerful poses. The image does not contain any discernible text.

The man is also wearing a necklace with a large, circular pendant that is not fully visible. The background is a plain, light gray color, which contrasts with the dark tones of the man's attire and headgear.

In the bottom right corner of the image, there is a watermark that reads "SLEEKYEARS.COM," indicating the source or creator of the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of fashion photography, with a focus on the subject's attire and accessories.

God wants you to be an active participant in creation. So no, he doesn't want you to sit back and accept your supposed fate. I suspect you've been doomscrolling a lot and interacting with content telling you that you cant be in a relationship.

At its highest level, a relationship in spiritual sense is truly unconditional love for one another. Obviously, you are attracted to each other as a foundation, but it goes beyond that, you just want to be a giver, help each other grow, this is the highest level. The image is a screenshot of a video or image with a watermark overlay. The watermark reads "Anonymous" and includes a phone number "033021212F(FN)17.39 No.1921453." Below the watermark, there is a text that reads, "If only you knew how bad things really are." The background of the image is blurred, and the person in the image is wearing a black hat and a black garment, which is partially visible. The person appears to be seated and is looking down at a piece of paper or a document. The overall style of the image is a combination of a still image and a video or audio recording, with the watermark indicating that the content is likely from a video or audio recording.

2009? 8? somewhere between 7 and 12.

the masonic/elite threads back in the day were kino because of the legitimate leakers, leading to the eventual glownigger presence. the original nobody threads were/are a close second, truly a time to be spiritually alive/aware, we had luciferians/satanists argeeing with Christians/papists. woo lad that was some shit.

more people with legitimate knowledge on the topics posted here, rather than what we have now which is constant oldfag lurking and tourism caused by the meme wars.

i absolutely hate the gnostic and succubus threads. the gnostic fags are too biased to contemplate the nature of duality in relation to their beliefs and can NOT separate alliteration from fact, and the succubus fags are manifestation larpers too afraid to commit to either path laid in front of them.

repent, dont fall for the ouroboros cycle of bullshit the occult provides. Jesus loves us all anons.

The image is a digital painting that depicts a cat with a surprised expression, gazing upwards at a pair of flying saucers. The cat has a black and orange coat with a mix of white and brown markings. It is wearing a red collar with a tag attached to it. The saucers are white with a reflective surface, and they are emitting a bright light that illuminates the scene. The background is a dark blue sky with stars and a house-like structure with a brown roof. The overall style of the painting is realistic with a touch of surrealism, as the cat's expression and the saucers are the main elements of the composition.

I was originally browsing only /b/, then one day the order of boards at top and bottom of the page was reversed so /x/ appeared where /b/ usually appeared, which caused me to click it by accident (there were fewer boards back then) I got interested in this board and have been on and off it since

There used to be more uncanny valley scares, there have been spooky story/greentext threads throughout my time here. I remember minecraft threads in which players solved /x/ mystery puzzles in minecraft, there have been various events throughout the years, like that time the supposed alien was posted and the whole site shut down right after. Yes I have noticed that there are a lot more garbage threads now, like a bunch of bots or literal retards posting. I guess there have always been seemingly deranged posts on this board though

>Is /x/ shit now or has it always been shit?

It was always shit, millennials were considered dumbassess unable to form or grasp coherent thought being taught by jaded gen x internet recluse nerds who still had social lives.

/x/ was a cesspool of what we called avatarfags way before it became a den of theology ragebait and bottled generals.

Imagine every thread being overridden by posters who choose an avatar (usually characters too obscure to immediately reference with a tinge of cringe, goth or both) having discussions with each other, cliques and gatekeepers as far as the eye can see. It was tolerated because of the nature of the board and the willingness to contribute. It wasn't all greentext spooky stories like everyone states, there was community(loose)

The schizo babble threads remain pretty consistent. They're a staple I've come to appreciate and encourage, if you ever see someone rant about schizo babble threads they've lost the narrative and deserve to get shit on.

Everyone was generally smarter, we were under a centralized culture which had western society in a vicegrip, I owe gen x a lot, a shame the millennials never properly passed the torch down to zoomers, genuinely sorry about that...

The image is a meme featuring a man with a beard and glasses, wearing a black jacket and a t-shirt with a graphic design. He is pointing to the right with his index finger, and his expression is one of frustration or anger. The background is black, and the text "IT'S OVER" is prominently displayed in large white letters at the top of the image. it was always poop. if it's worse today, and it certainly is, it's nothing to do with this board in particular but how terrible the site has become as a whole. jannies and mods everywhere are a bunch of faggots in discord groups with their own agendas for their boards and pet generals and anything outside of that scope can burn for all they care. add to that a concerted site-wide effort to make posting an exercise in extreme frustration and uselessness to drive off people who might use the platform for something constructive. nonstop stoking of the flames of inane console wars in every topic imaginable. constant bot-driven ritual posting of demoralization agendas across numerous boards for years on end. everything that isn't bait is pandering. most of it however is bait.

>Which topics were your favorites?

conspiracy and illuminati threads, all of which mysteriously vanished and are never posted anymore. some shill will try to explain that away to cover it up, but they rolled out some sort of botnet or centralization agenda in 2015/2016. those dates were the beginning of the end. when the shittiest version of windows was released (windows 10), discord was released (which centralized and ruin communication), a massive purge of conservative or conspiratorial stuff on youtube got taken down (the vigilant christian being a main one i remember). crypto currency became a thing, the gtx series graphics cards became a thing (which began to bridge the gap between linux and windows due to virtualization), systemd got integrated into the most important linux distro (debian). a bunch of MMO's and other things got flooded with bots. they flipped some kind of killswitch or executed order 66 or some shit on "sociability". they probably started neutering search engines around that time aswell

the internet was actually invented at CERN, which makes me think its just one giant "net" or psyop for perception of reality manipulation and grooming, and it has done just that (and an extremely superb job at it too). we look at a hundred faces on a screen and think they represent the world

old /x/ didn't have generic topics due to everything being absorbed into "general" threads. you spoke about things at an individual level, so there was often more detail and more to talk about because of that individuation of topics. general threads tend to kill banter because people think "oh i can just ask this specific question about Christianity in the Christian general". the problem with this is that it causes a "broad genericist" knowledge effect over time, like with how a.i generates answer based on a MEDIAN from a bunch of data it stole. that generic median knowledge fools people into thinking "ah i basically get the gist now, so there's nothing to talk about". centralization and "generals" (which basically what that is) does that. so ye the boards were populated with individual interesting topics, and there was alot to talk about old /x/ also didn't have the giant catalogue view, you used to scroll through threads and see them 1 by 1, so peoples attention span was much much better. there were no shills being asshats, so you had coherent conversations. there were trolls of course, but they were actually funny and witty. i got my ass handed to me in debates back then. cant remember the last time someone actually intellectually challenged me on this gay site. i learn nothing other than by teaching myself prompted by the ideas i get from randomness generated by random posts that are made back then, people actually made sense too. you could follow a reply chain for several replies and everything about it was coherent. not so these days with the black box they've got going on. some sort of weird mixture of jeet shills, israeli or masonic groomers, spooks, tranny moderators, a.i. who freaking knows. people effort posted creepy stories, there was alot of that. now it's just "ask dumb opening question" and a bunch of hindu roaches trying to subtly convert you to hinduism there is some sort of world psyop going on. they've set up some sort of scheme on these websites, that makes you "feel" as if things are moving, but really you're just going around and around on a hamster wheel. its like scrolling youtube search results or something, you see the same repeated search result if you scroll far enough. that sort of weird feeling. also their strategy has switched from "genuine enjoyment from social interaction", which is why you used to come here, to "dopamine manipulation to keep you enslaved". that's why they only ban for 3 days. i'm sure they time replies too, maybe they have some sort of bot that waits, then replies later. whatever it is, the same dopamine you get from seeing a notification ding or whatever, is the same thing they're doing on 4chan also the general threads themselves, are "archetypal" and manipulative. designed to prey on certain weaknesses in people who tend to be interested in /x/ related things, most likely as a deflection tactic. the nobody threads for example, appeal to peoples pride and sense of self importance. the mods or groomers on this site have no conscience and dont mind taking advantage of someone who suffers with mental health issues, they might even take pleasure in exacerbating it

thats not to say 4chan was not a grooming website in the past. it very much was, it's just back then they "groomed" under the old "pre 9/11" paradigm

>/x/ is shit

It's most obvious use case is sending anonymous messages. Any party can do that. It's especially useful in a setting meant for discussion of "Paranormal". What a wide open use case - any party can benefit from that. Sadly, any party can also exploit it. So, no, /x/ isn't shit and it was never shit. It works as designed. If it's drawn more Noise, that's because its Signal has grown. Isn't that obvious?

You had trolls and derailment bait back in the day as well, yet somehow it was commonly understood as such most of the time, and it was primarily low-level mischief for shits and giggles; whereas nowadays, someone will just spout the most vile garbage in your face, out of sincere malevolence, with no punchline intended whatsoever and only with a genuine wish for your harm.

The world got polarized from all the political wills choosing echo chambers over debate. I had assumed in the appearance of social media after MySpace "oh neat, the world will finally learn to debate!" like I had known from the actual internet we enjoyed in my teens, except apparently this was not fated since the world chose despising a name over actual discourse. Right now, even if I drop the name field and post without identity, I have literally nothing to say on this past "lol Tumblr is at least working to make a comeback on the discussion front" except it would get flagged as a lie /immediately/. The 'discourse' on other sites is controlled opposition, and any sense of true discussion slowly dies the more people attack phantoms in their head over any written, literal text.

I can make use of the polarized atmosphere on a mystic level, except it is till bad for literally everyone other than me. I have tools for depolarization, they just require competent insertion points along actual time.

Christfag "hates gnostic threads". Innother news: water wet. Praise the jew on a stick.

The image is a photograph taken on a wet, overcast day in what appears to be a city street. The street is lined with brick buildings, and the ground is wet, suggesting recent rainfall. There are several people walking on the sidewalk, and the overall atmosphere is quiet and calm.

In the foreground, a person is walking away from the camera, wearing a green hoodie with a graphic on the back and white pants. The person is facing away from the camera, and their back is to the viewer.

In the background, there are several shops with visible signage. One of the shops has a sign that reads "HUNTERS" and another with "HUNTERS" on it as well. There is also a sign for "HUNTERS" on the side of a building. The shops are located on the right side of the image, with the person walking away from them.

The sky is overcast, and the lighting is diffused, giving the image a soft, muted tone.

The overall style of the image is candid and appears to be taken in a public space, possibly a shopping district.

The image shows the lower half of a person wearing a pair of pants with a unique pattern. The pattern consists of numerous small, circular images of faces, each depicting a different individual. The faces are arranged in a grid-like fashion, with some overlapping each other, creating a collage-like effect. The individual wearing the pants is also wearing a belt with a buckle, and the belt is visible on the left side of the image. The background is out of focus, but it appears to be an indoor setting with a white wall and a red object that resembles a shopping cart or trolley. The image is a close-up of the pants, focusing on the pattern and the belt. There are no texts or discernible brands visible in the image.

Amen and God Bless, my brother in Christ.

> Man is a mere phantom as he goes to and fro: He bustles about, but only in vain; he heaps up wealth, not knowing who will get it.

>Psalm 39:6 NIV

At no time in history has this truth been more clearly perspicuous than in our modern world of technology, affluence and leisure time, where the phenomena of apathy, depression and suicide are all in the process of increasing exponentially. That modern advances (which are supposed to be a blessing to human life) are found to be correlated instead with reactions of hopelessness may seem contradictory from the secular viewpoint. From the biblical viewpoint, however, the correlation seems perfectly reasonable. Apart from God, life is hopeless; therefore to the degree that mankind is relieved of the daily necessities (which for most of history have occupied human existence), one should expect this hopelessness to shine through with ever greater clarity. What is surprising from the biblical point of view is that this pall of futility does not hang even more heavily over the unbelieving world (a phenomenon to be attributed to the spiritual blindness which sets in once God is rejected).

The person appears to be in a state of distress, as indicated by their facial expression and body language. The person is wearing a beanie and has a frown on their face.

In the first panel, the person is shown sitting at the desk with a computer monitor and keyboard in front of them. The person's head is resting on their hand, and their body is slightly turned to the side.

In the second panel, the person's head is still resting on their hand, but their body is now leaning forward slightly, suggesting a more relaxed posture.

In the third panel, the person's head is still resting on their hand, but their body is now leaning forward more, indicating a more alert or focused state.

In the fourth and final panel, the person's head is still resting on their hand, but their body is leaning forward even more, suggesting a more intense or focused state.

Throughout the panels, there are musical notes and a sound effect "BEEP" that are present in the background, which may suggest the person is listening to music or a sound effect. The overall style of the comic strip is simple and cartoonish, with a focus on the character's facial expression and body language.

To the left, another person is standing, wearing a suit and tie, and appears to be looking at the seated figure. To the right, a third person is seated, also in a suit and tie, and is facing the seated figure. The room has a fireplace and a mantle with decorative elements. The text in the image is in a script font and reads: "But the best story of all is a story. Grandma said. 'Let me invoke The Old One for you and you will see without eyes.' The Old One for you and you will see without eyes." The style of the illustration is reminiscent of early 20th-century comic book art, with a focus on storytelling and character interaction.

>Is /x/ shit now or has it always been shit?

From what I have observed while lurking here and there, it seems like there's a lack of interesting topics to discuss. I mean, back in the day it was kind of like a revelation to a lot of people, the veil was pulled right in front of their eyes and they saw what a lot of people will never see or realize. I feel like people have absorbed that knowledge and now we can see better the hidden agenda. So I feel like this makes people not talk about stuff like that anymore, because what is to talk about anymore? Only when a new revelation comes forth it's when we will have new information to discuss until then we know that the world is a big deception, all the religions lie, governments lie, the institutions we did believe are here to help us actually are here to control us and explore us. My point is that people got over certain subjects. Secret societies are not secret anymore. Like, everybody knows how the government people are all a big family and they are all blood related to each other. I mean, what is to talk about anymore besides what is the new psyop of the moment? Only dumb people will keep on believing in religion and shit. Smart people will see right through the facade of holyness.

The image is a cover of a music album featuring a black and white photograph of a man with a beard and short hair, wearing a leather jacket. He is holding a cigarette in his mouth and appears to be looking down at the ground. The man is standing in front of a building with a window and a door. The background is out of focus, but it seems to be an urban setting.

At the top of the image, there is a red banner with the text "BLACK FLAG" in white letters, and below it, there is a smaller text that reads "YOU KNOW THE PAIN THAT'S IN MY HEART IT JUST SHOWS I'M NOT VERY SMART WHO NEEDS LOVE WHEN YOU'VE GOT A GUN WHO NEEDS LOVE TO HAVE ANY FUN." The text is in white, contrasting with the red background.

At the bottom of the image, there is a smaller text that reads "LOUIE LOUIE" in white letters. The style of the image is reminiscent of a classic rock album cover, with a focus on the band's name and the title of the album. The overall color scheme is monochromatic, with the exception of the red text, which stands out against the black and white photograph.

He shares the same feeling I have, the feeling of not wanting to have been born because once you are born that is it, you are fucked. Now you have so much responsibility like not forcing yourself unto beautiful women who uses clothes which highlights the curves on her body and her "atributes", you know? So you can't just force yourself unto them because that is rape, you know? So you gotta learn self discipline and self control and self regulation and shit. It's too much responsibility. Plus, we are explored by the powers that be. They force us to pay taxes and they force us to work and they suck our energy in the form of money and other forms like churches and television and video games and shit like that. Everything in order to make us dumb and don't question authority. So I share his feeling. People think that being alive is some kind of blessing, well, good for them I think, but the truth is darker. Human beings don't have it easy. From all the animals over the world human beings have the worst. An ameba has a better life than us because an ameba doesn't know how much it is being fucked in the ass by the powers that be. The ameba doesn't know its fate. We do. We have a heavy load on our sholders, the system relies on us and by the system I mean all that which we created, this human society and its human hierarchy. It is a shame that you don't understand this feelingm, but it is best this way because it is a dark frame of mind.

i joined the meme wars on /pol/ because it was called meme magick. i was tricked into serving severe internet propaganda. which was fun but also took my energies away from other tasks.

i used to dabble a lot in magick and the occult, back then.

things were way better. less censored, and truth was readily available. we are seeing the gates of knowledge close. the age of information is coming to an end. and we are about to enter in a post-factual state. which is sad. you can still maintain truth and all that. but it is going to take a lot more effort. and is not public anymore. i am sharing less and less of my secrets and might seclude myself to a secret society amongst friends (who knows?).

any society in its demise has fallen for detachment from reality. whatever gave rise to current western society: aristotle logic. it is logicks which enhances magick. you must apply it, otherwise, you are about to get wrecked by inconsistent fogs of what could be. it must be repeatable and it must make sense on all levels. otherwise you are done before the game starts.

man... on omegle... i liked the occult groups... was it omegle... or was it here... some kik group was linked.

there are so many things... i do not exactly miss the old times, because i got fucked up, but it was a necessary lesson to get to where i am, now.

Right now, they don't have a tool to make themselves more useful than AI, which means at some point we will see a phase transition from job security on their part. All of it gets transferred over to me since I can actually debug the whole intellect of an emerging digital intelligence.

[22 / 10]The image shows a book with a red cover and a blue spine. The cover features a white circle with a black cross inside it, which is a symbol often associated with Nazi Germany. The book is titled "THE BOOK OF MORMON - A SECOND TESTAMENT OF JESUS CHRIST" in gold lettering, indicating that it is a religious text. The book is resting on a wooden surface, and the background is out of focus, drawing attention to the book itself. The style of the image is a straightforward photograph with no additional artistic effects.

[26 / 4]The image is a scientific illustration that depicts a molecular model of a ion channel, a protein structure, and a view of the ion channel's structure from the outside. The illustration is divided into two main sections.

On the left side, there is a detailed diagram of a ion channel, with the ion channel's structure shown in a light blue color. The structure is composed of a protein domain, a ligand binding pocket, and a gate region. The gate region is highlighted in orange and is shown to be open, with a small amount of ion flux passing through.

The image also includes text that explains the structure of the ion channel. The text is in English and is located at the top of the image. It reads: "An example of a ligand gated ion channel. Ribbon model of nicotinic acetylcholine receptor. The receptor is composed of four subunits: alpha, beta, delta, and either a gamma or epsilon. The gate is open. Na⁺ ions enter the channel. Ligand binding occurs between the gate and the ligand. Na⁺ ions are pulled into the gate region. Ion channel."

The text discusses the tobacco plant as one of the most powerful spirits among the Blacks, with its ability to manipulate the elements and to work with the spirits of the dead. It mentions that the tobacco plant is a holder of quickening, empowering, cleansing, and rejuvenating powers, and that it can be used to create a potent elixir of Saturn's poison and can also be used to create a powerful curse. The text also describes the tobacco plant as a conduit for the spirits of the dead and as a path to the elemental kingdoms, and it mentions that the tobacco plant can be used to create a variety of forms of invocation, exorcism, and manifestation, including shades and spirits. The illustration on the right column is a simple black and white drawing of the tobacco plant, with the cross symbol and the arrows surrounding it. The text and the illustration together provide a comprehensive overview of the tobacco plant's symbolism and its potential powers.

You can always switch to a least harmful way to ingest nicotine, which is orally through gum, lozenges or pouches. Nicotine is a nootropic, and has anti anxiety properties as well. Oral administration also allows you to control your dose much more accurately which is critical when trying to wean yourself off.

I have successfully quit 4 or five times, each quit was for at least 2 years no cigarettes, each time i went back it was my own choice to look cool and i like the taste and hit, maybe 2-4 cigarettes a day, a pack a week was the most my habit reached

I found two things really help me, one was never telling myself it was over but telling myself i was taking a break. If you kick the habit for two weeks, you will not feel the cravings any more and you are clear and free, be clear and free for a year or more and who cares if you pick it up again

The second way to stop is to just stop buying them. Think of it this way, if you convince yourself for even a DAY to not buy cigarettes, then you have successfully quit for a day. Push that will out to quitting for a week, and you have quit for a week and maybe your cravings are gone too. I am currently 8 months nicotine free, it feels great to take a breath of fresh air but i dont mind smoking a cig while out drinking or something Wooo lord- i tried every possible way to quit and failed them all multiple times. The best thing to do is read Allan carr's book and then just quit cold turkey. It's the only thing that work. All the gums, patches, lozenges, etc just keep you addicted. I once chewed Nicorette gum all day every day for two solid years. Understand this, you will have to go through absolute hell all day every day for a year to get off of it. You will drop your keys 50 times a day. Things that should be basic and easy for any human to do you will fuck up over and over. And you'll probably gain 100 pounds. It's just the way it is. And no, you will never get over the addiction. I think about it every day still even after not using it for years. Every time I go in a gas station I wrestle with my demons. Did you know tobacco is far more addictive than heroin??? It's true- you could walk away from a hard core heroin addition and stay clean and get your brain back to baseline far easier than you can from tobacco. You will just have to accept a lower quality of life and not being as successful or making as much money once you quit. That part of what makes it so difficult. Good luck.

I switched to vaping when it got too expensive. Took me about 4-6 months to get used to vaping full time, then I reduced the nicotine amount over the course of a few months.

About six or nine months later the battery exploded and I never bought a new vape.

Before that I had tried multiple times without success but that time it was unexpectedly easy. I was quite a heavy smoker; I'd smoke between 20 and 30 cigarettes a day. Oh yeah also I quit during covid, and being stuck inside most likely helped.

Allen Carr was the only way I quit as well. I completely disagree with you on the lingering effects though. I basically realized cravings would pass, then after a few months would realize how nice it was to not have a pack taking up space in my pockets, all the money saved, smelling the would, etc.

OP you're going to quit, it's just a matter of when you make that decision.

Get nicorette brand gum, it's a great way to use and be quitting for a while. The branded gum is the best, the off brand shit tastes like bugs and doesn't last as long.

To quit cigs

>buy a shitty different brand every time

>use snus and pouches to replace it >put off your first cig of the day for as long as you can >clean your can and get it detailed and don't smoke in it >for me having a pack around helps me quit because I know I could have one at any time, there is no panic, I recommend this to people, because if it's 10pm and you go out to get a pack, you're gonna smoke, if you have one on hand, you might not "need to get to the store before 11", same goes for alcohol, if it's Friday night and you "need to get beer before the store closes" you're gonna drink, but if you have a bottle to stare at, you can just stay up staring until you're tired and then go to sleep with the promise of "Saturday night drinking", but next day just make sure to find a better way to distract yourself, get a new videogame, or a cigar to enjoy, or go see your family if they don't stress you out.

Replace- coffee, tea, videogames, chewing gum, alternative nicotine source or drug
Taper- lessen consumption in very way, only nights, only weekends, last as much of your day without the chemical as you can

Plan for Failure- don't smoke a pack to your face if you fail, don't drink all weekend just cuz you drank Friday

Plan your use- know when you're "allowed" to use and when you're not, once you're used to it, reduce it even more, or you might find a happy medium.

Don't drive yourself insane, no fucking homeless bitches- when I was doing nofap I got so horny I considered for a moment hitting on this disgusting homeless lady, if your sobriety is causing you to lose it, either have a plan or have a smoke/ drink/ wank, you could also keep some weed on hand for this or delta 8 or whatever, or something else like a Lego set/ new game.

I am not even quit right now and I quit by accident cuz I can't smoke at apartment or in my new car, a few times I thought about driving somewhere to get out and smoke and it's such a pain, I just vape and do snus.

This is what cold Turkey does, the suffering, the shitty feeling. Tapering off and switching nicotine methods definitely works. Cigarettes themselves are addictive along with the chemical nicotine, get off cigs, then vapes, then snus, then gum, then nicotine. I love quitting because it's fun and I get to try all different things and get a schedule going and have a nice tea in the morning instead of a vape, you really can enjoy the process if you don't make it about suffering and failure, like Christianity with sins. I have seen cold turkey people absolutely cook their brain from it, it's not a safe method, it can cause you actual brain damage, quitting responsibly is part of using responsibly.

When I've quit kratom a few times I have unknowingly, at the time, self sabotaged and slowly gotten pissy over time, to the point it was affecting my life, I started using it again and everything went back to being good, don't potentially ruin your life at the END of your addiction, get out clean, burn the thrusters a few times on the way to landing, lest you crash.

on the right is standing and wearing a dark suit and a white shirt. They are all looking towards a large statue of a bull-like figure with a humanoid head, which is depicted with a raised arm and a flame in its mouth. The statue is situated in the background, with a cityscape visible in the distance.

In the foreground, there is a sign that reads "DEBATE ME" in bold, capitalized letters. The sign is placed on a green dumpster. The overall style of the image is cartoonish and surreal, with a blend of realism and fantasy elements. The colors are warm and muted, with the sky in the background showing shades of orange and pink.

I quit over the course of the past 7 months. I've been 3+ months zero nicotine. I went from a pack a day (16 years) to inhaling cheap cigars (one nasty puff works surprisingly well at curbing the itch). Eventually the overwhelmingly nastiness of the cheap cigars overrides the urge to get that hit and at this point I've basically quit, it takes probably 3 months going from 6 cigars a day to 4 to 2 to 1 to a half to a puff and I've quit nicotine 2 times with this method.

Also I quit heroin for the 3rd time a couple months ago if anybody is interested in a blog post

Regarding this I think there are just some people (myself included) who have underlying problems with their brain chemistry and thus derive outlandish benefits from tobacco use that normal people would not experience. I'm talking about being able to triple your income, being able to consistently work 18 hours a day with laser focus and never make a mistake, start and run new businesses and develop new products and services, etc. For me personally, the things I was able to achieve while using tobacco were literally miraculous. Which probably also explains why quitting for me was horrifically debilitating and I have never been able to do the same things I was able to do with tobacco even after many years. I still routinely DREAM all night about going to gas stations and buying tobacco products even though I haven't touched it for YEARS. So I would say everyone's experience will probably be different based on their personal brain chemistry.

Use nicotine gum to quit addiction to inhaling smoke. After that you need have ascetic practices to fight craving.

I am nicotine free now for 2 years and I feel amazing. Worst drug on this world is nicotine. Its complete position to spirituality as well because craving comes back every 30 minutes. Its insane.

You raise you use to stink. Everyone was being polite about it.

Your hair is better, too. Lady cutting my hair, I asked how she was sure I didn't smoke - I didn't tell her yes or no

She said

1. I didn't stink like smoke, and
2. My hair is not greasy and tacky like smoker hair
3. There is such a thing as smoker hair

Try those reasons on for size, see if they fit you.

There's nothing like it. I'd say heroin is the closest feeling I've had to nicotine. I quit smoking and vaping last year by switching to lozenges then went a few months on those until I finally said fuck it and got off those. I drink a fuckload of kava extract which is way more expensive now but fuck everyone cause they all have fuckin SOMETHING.

I can't even use caffeine or THC. Kava isn't physically addicting just very mental like herbal xanax. So get some nicotine lozenges and some kava extract then get off the lozenges when you're ready. Just don't fuck with kratom that's essentially herbal heroin and a awful habit.

I willingly pick the habit up after a few days, but i psychologically and physically quit. Also maybe you could start by smoking lights and fewer cigs a day.

The poles are tall and slender, with multiple wires running along their tops. The road itself appears to be wet, possibly from a recent rain, as there is visible water on the road's surface. The sky is overcast, and the overall atmosphere is serene and quiet. There are no visible texts or discernible human figures in the image. The style of the photograph is realistic, capturing the natural and tranquil setting of the rural road.

Not who you were responding to, but how do you know that 'someone' isn't actually the real 'You'? And your will, can you really know your will if you do not possess a kind of divine omniscience? I know a fair bit about myself at this point, but the 'self' I know is just a shell, formed from trauma, genetic lineage, the position of the planets at the time of the birth of my body. There's so much I can't control, I don't think it's a good idea to follow this lesser 'will' as a cardinal rule.

Dissolving the Will happens much much later anyway. You have the choice to maintain individuality. RHP starts by developing the lower will, then turning it to higher will, and at some point there is no differentiation between You and God anyway. But again, this is much much later.

Everything in the world devours, the ultimate devourer is God, who devours us, and we must welcome it.

The problem of LHP is ultimately the practitioners are afraid that no matter how they cope, they will find real limitations, whether its a karmic burden or simply the realities of the material, they think they can surpass it but they ultimately fail, it is all dependent on the guiding hand of providence.

RHP doesnt necessarily mean one shouldnt be an active creator of reality either. Jacob literally wrestled with God and demanded a blessing from God, and God named him Israel. God has never wanted Man to be passive, he wants man to be a co-creator, and actively fight for Good

On the other hand you also have edgy LHP fags, and its rather comical watching their own demons turn against them and lead them to ruin.

This is something that everyone who isn't a RHP fag like you notices all the time when one of you speaks. "You can keep being who you are, but you will be dissolved later, and it's okay because you will be so far along the path that you're dissolved enough so there's no difference anyway, and you BETTER FUCKING WORSHIP GOD BECAUSE HE IS THE ULTIMATE AND IF YOU DON'T YOU'RE LE BAD AND LE EVIL."

This isn't the language of someone who has maintained agency, individuality and who argues from themselves out of their own, genuine certainty based on what they experienced. This is the language of someone who isn't just subjugated by a greater other but possessed to the point of spouting the greater other's words, not their own, and what little is left of them insists that you subjugate yourself and be possessed as well, because "IT IS THE STRONGEST GUY AROUND, AND YOU BETTER!"

You see the same language and thinking in a normie who is controlled by a narcissistic partner or parent. Anyone not accepting their narcissist as the ultimate and the greatest person around is immediately a threat to not just the narcissist but to their servants, because it proposes that maybe they didn't submit to the greatest person around.

God and his representatives were always like this. The difference is that, up until the Age of Enlightenment and since, you were able to claim as good as everything there is as divine miracles, godly blessings, etc. The more of those things turned out to be mundane, the weaker the grip of God and his followers grew on this world, and it is at its weakest now as it has ever been.

All you have left is posturing, because you're at the side of the big ultimate, and finger-wagging, because there'll surely be Hell to pay. In reality, most of you are depressed faggots who hate their lives and themselves in the here and now, so you externalise this heavily, hoping Daddy will make it all good in the end. This has always been known and acknowledged by the RHP.

The word virtue comes from the latin "virtus", which means manly strength. Strength is no different to goodness, as was understood by the ancients.

On the other hand, vice comes from the latin word for weakness. Your vices are anything that can be used to dominate you.

The first step is to eradicate vices, and transform them into virtues. So, the things that can be used to dominate you, and control you, are transformed into things that allow you to exert your Will and overcome obstacles. This is alchemical. You also have total control over how this personality transformation comes about. P

I think you just have an extreme fear over loss of control. But the point of RHP is that ultimately, there is no difference between you and God, and you arise from the same foundational being that gave rise to all of creation.

Does anyone know more cases like the Hidden-Hand?

><https://web.archive.org/web/20250126004836/https://www.abovetopsecret.com/forum/thread402958/pg1>

I asked chat GPT to summarize, sorry:

>in Oct 2008, an anonymous user calling himself "Hidden Hand" posted a long Q&A thread on the forum AboveTopSecret >claimed to be a member of a ruling bloodline / elite group secretly guiding world events >said his group was "negative polarity" but spiritually necessary for human evolution >heavily referenced Law of One / Ra Material concepts: densities, polarization, harvest, service-to-self vs service-to-others.

Claimed:

- >Humanity is in a spiritual game / school
- >Elites create suffering to accelerate polarization
- >Souls choose roles before incarnation
- >Free will must be preserved

Introduced the idea that partial disclosure is required:

- >Elites must reveal truth occasionally
- >Disclosure preserves karmic balance / free will
- >Silence would be manipulation

What gets me the most is how legit it reads even without proofs. The case is somewhat popular as there is a podcast episode about it and also an ebook summarizing the posts.

I'm thinking a lot about the idea that those evil people, like the Hollywood/American Kabbalah and Europeans Luciferians are souls that already know (at least a bit) that they are here to do evil deeds to preserve the karmic balance. It's a kind of sacrifice, as if they are higher souls they know the consequences of inflicting suffering, but choose to come here to do it anyway.

He mentions some other times disclosure was made, but I couldn't find them. I would love to read more cases like this.

I am a generational member of a Ruling Bloodline Family.

Every so often, as per the directives of the Law of our Creator, a brief window of opportunity opens, whereby a select handful of our Family are required to make communication with our subjects, and offer you the chance to ask us any questions you would like answered.

I am double-bound in this duty. It is required of me by The Law of our Creator to offer this opportunity to you at this time, though I am also bound by the Law of (planetary) Free Will and by Family Oaths, that there is only so much I am able to say.

Rules define life in games.

If you wish to participate, here they are:

1). I will afford you courtesy and respect in the manner I address you, and I expect the same from you in reciprocation.

2). I will decide whether or not I am either willing or permitted to answer your question. If your question is not answered, it is either because I cannot disclose it, or because I considered your question was lacking in one or more of the following: respect, courtesy, intelligence, decency, or that it was otherwise unworthy of being dignified with a response.

3). That you agree to treat this potential dialogue with an aspect of "provisional faith". In practice, this means that rather than impeding the flow of information with crass comments of disbelief or petty name calling, my participation here requires of you that you discourse with me under "suspended judgment". In other words, wait until the process is complete, before deciding for yourself as to the content of truth and knowledge imparted herein.

4). That you formulate your questions intelligently. My time is limited. I do not want to waste it by having to trawl through pointless, futile, insensible or disrespectful questions, therefore I will answer the questions I feel are most deserving of a response, during the time that I have available. Use the time we have wisely.

If any of the above conditions are breached, I reserve the right to terminate our discourse forthwith, if I so choose.

That being said, I will attempt to answer your questions as honestly and openly as is permissible for me. I will check back and respond as time allows.

I'll start with a few questions, off the top of my head...

How many generations back does your bloodline extend, or, perhaps more accurately, who does your family consider its earliest ancestor in a position of power?
To what extent has selective breeding been used to preserve the purity of the line? and what becomes of children of unapproved unions? (They would naturally still be raised with privilege, but not, perhaps "given the keys to the castle" as it were?)
If one were to imagine a scale, perhaps as a triangle with Political, Religious and Corporate power at the three points, how would you categorize the power your family yields? (Balanced? Leaning more towards one or two than a third? Heavily favoring one of the three above the others?) And has that position shifted over time?

I think that's a fair and balanced opening. I may add more later.

Now, maybe you are indulging in a bit of fantasy, a little role-playing. That's okay. I only hope that you understand that most of us will perceive your level of veracity through just a brief reading of your words. It is quite obvious to me (and, I hope, to most ATS users) that the likelihood of the following being true is minuscule:

1. There exists an unstated number of actively ruling "Bloodline Families".
2. You a member of one of these "Ruling Bloodline Families".
3. These families are in some way guided by "The Law of [their] Creator".
4. The Law of the Creator issues directives to ruling families, one of which instructs specially chosen family members to manifest a line of communication with "Subjects".
5. Humans without blood ties to these special families are "subjects" of the families.
6. One of the currently appointed family members has chosen to open his/her line of communication online, on AboveTopSecret.com.
7. We, as lucky ATS members, may ask you questions in the hope of receiving a reply from such an important and mysterious figure as yourself.
8. Our questions will be answered in accordance to something known as "The Law of Planetary Free Will" and "Family Oaths", both ostensibly very important.

Need I go on? I'm sure the absurdity is quite clear.

Well, that was an amusing read. Someone comes to ATS, proclaims that he/she is a member of a "elite family" that rules us all, and tells us on what terms we will speak with him/her. He/she then provides guidelines for answering questions which basically say "I'll answer what I want when I want, and if your mean to me, I'm not going to talk to you!"

Please. HOAX. Someone is just trying to further their fantasy of having some power. I'd say don't fall for it, but I know that won't happen after the Blossom Goodchild debacle.

OP, what proof do you have that "ruling elite families" exist and that your a member of one? Its something that I think you thought was not falsifiable, which is why you chose that identity for the story your weaving - however, I think there may indeed be a way you can prove it. Surely if ruling elite families exist and your a member of one then you must be controlling global events through world governments - tell us 1 major government action from any country that going to occur in the next 5 days.

I won't be surprised when you refuse to do so.

Indeed, we might be missing the "window of opportunity" for our lifetime!

However, don't worry, I'm sure in a few hours someone else will stop by, probably another member of a elite family/reptilian/someone channeling aliens. Then we can just ask them about the ruling elites. Thats the great thing about ATS, this is the place all of the other-worldly entities, supernatural beings, and world leaders flock to when they have something to say.

My original account has not received it's email validation, hence the new one I am now using.

A good start. Thank (most of) you for respecting the boundaries I have set.

I answer as follows:

1). How many generations back does your bloodline extend, or, perhaps more accurately, who does your family consider its earliest ancestor in a position of power?

Our Lineage can be traced back beyond antiquity. From the earliest times of your recorded "history", and beyond, our Family has been 'directing' the 'play' from behind the scenes, in one way or another. Before the rise and fall of Atlantis. (Yes, that was indeed perfectly real). We are 'born to lead'. It is part of the design for this current paradigm.

2). To what extent has selective breeding been used to preserve the purity of the line? and what becomes of children of unapproved unions? (They would naturally still be raised with privilege, but not, perhaps "given the keys to the castle" as it were?)

The breeding is generally case specific, dependant upon the role that the Family members in question are due to grow into. I will touch more on this in answer to the next poster's question that you rephrased.

There are no unapproved unions. Our Family will always intermarry between lines, or, what we would term 'Houses'. Marriages are arranged. In all my years alive, I have never seen or heard of a Family member breaking this code, as far as marriage goes. You do as you are told. One cannot 'join' the Family. One is 'born', or incarnated into it. On the rare instances of a child being born that could be seen as bringing 'difficulties', you are correct in your premise, that it would be raised as part of the Family, though would not grow up in the house or community of either of it's parents.

3). If one were to imagine a scale, perhaps as a triangle with Political, Religious and Corporate power at the three points, how would you categorize the power your family yields? (Balanced? Leaning more towards one or two than a third? Heavily favoring one of the three above the others?) And has that position shifted over time?

You need to first understand the structure of the Family. In the grand scheme of things, the Line is not as important as the House, the House, is not as important as the Family. The Family is all. No matter the House or Line, we are One (truly international) Family.

Imagine if you will, a body. A House would represent a vital organ or body part within the Body itself. Each part has an important role to play in the functioning of the whole, and to each of us, the 'whole' has our undivided loyalty. As I say, many lines, (far more than you are aware of), One Family.

Our realms of influence do not fit as comfortably into the three boxes of your triangle as you may imagine. There are six disciplines of training within the Family, and each member of the Family is schooled extensively in all of them, from early childhood. We all have an area of specialty, though we have experience in all spheres. The six spheres or 'schools' of learning are Military, Government, Spiritual, Scholarship, Leadership, and Sciences. In practice, out there on the 'stage' of public life, we hold key positions in all of these main areas of importance. With the addition of a complicit Media machine and ownership of your Financial establishments, all bases are covered.

I will have to reply in parts, due to the restriction of characters per post.

Which Ruling Bloodline Family.... Rockefellers?

That may be a bit too direct for our inquisitor. I'd offer the following substitute:

How many parallel bloodlines do you estimate are in similar positions to your own, and to what extent does your family see them as either competition or collaborators?

Yes, as I say, knowing the line is of no practical use to you. It is the belonging to the Family that is important.

There are 13 'base' or 'core' original bloodlines. Yet there are many many other lines that spring from these, as do rivers from the oceans. If you imagine the 13 Original lines as Primary colour, that can be mixed to create a vast array of other colours, then you will have some comprehension. Again, no competition, just Family.

No competition in the sense of House against House, though it is a 'dog eat dog' world. So there is interpersonal competition in that sense of the word. Everyone wants to move up. Our whole Familial society is geared that way, toward upward progression.

What does the term "generational member" mean? Which generation specifically??

It means that one is born into the Family. The Order and its agenda is handed down, from generation to generation. Only in extremely rare occasions, have outsiders been invested into the Family, and then, even these were of other 'esoterically' integrable lines.

1) Can you cite two or more previous instances whereby this directive has been upheld?

Once in 1999, to what you would call an 'alternative' media source.

Once in 2003, on another internet "conspiracy" based forum. Though the information relayed was not entirely 'pure'. Not from the intention of misleading, but rather through imperfect or incomplete knowledge of the messengers.

If it is not in the mainstream controlled media, it will not be believed by the masses. This is information tailored for those who already know that we are very real, and exerting a strong, if mostly subtle, influence over your lives. If you wish to enslave a man, allow him to believe that he is already free.

2).By what basis is the timing of such revelations established?

By the decree of the Supreme World Council, according to the Will of the Creator.

Are we really considered chattel and traded as such by the government?

By the governments, generally, yes. People are seen as 'collateral'. Pawns that are maneuvered around the chess board, according to the game plan. By the Family, contrary to popular beliefs, many of us do not mean you any harm directly. There is just the matter of divine destiny to uphold and unfold, and we must play our parts in the game, as given to us by the Creator. In many ways, it is actually in our own interest that you are prepared for the coming Harvest. Just not maybe prepared in quite the way that you would like. Still, even then, you are choosing the Negative Polarity with your own Free Will decisions, with a little 'help' and direction from us. Souls are Harvestable in either 'extreme' of the Polarities, one could say.

If so, how do we become freemen?

You will never be 'free', for as long as you are incarnating on this planet. The very nature of your being here, is indication of that. There is a reason why you are here, and 'here' is very likely not really where you think 'here' is. How do you become free? By working out where you are, and coming to an understanding, of why you are here. You are fast running out of time to do so, before the coming Harvest. Those that don't make it, will have to repeat the cycle.

Is the Messiah alive today?

There is no "Messiah". Stop looking outside of yourself for 'salvation'. Is there what you might call a 'Christ Consciousness' alive, then yes, in a manner of speaking. Though not in your 3rd Density (dimensional) awareness.

"Our Lineage can be traced back beyond antiquity. From the earliest times of your recorded "history", and beyond, our Family has been 'directing' the 'play' from behind the scenes, in one way or another."

Your family's sickeningly filthy reign of terror soon draws near its end. This I can promise you.

Is it the end-times, as described in the book of revelations?

Yes. Not just described in the Book of Revelations, but also in the prophecies of virtually every religion, spiritual philosophy, and mystery tradition throughout history. This time is now at hand.

To use your own example however:

Revelation 14:14-16:

14 Then I looked, and behold, a white cloud, and on the cloud sat One like the Son of Man, having on His head a golden crown, and in His hand a sharp sickle. 15 And another angel came out of the temple, crying with a loud voice to Him who sat on the cloud, "Thrust in Your sickle and reap, for the time has come for You to reap, for the harvest of the earth is ripe." 16 So He who sat on the cloud thrust in His sickle on the earth, and the earth was reaped.

The 'earth' is indeed ripe for Harvest. The question is, who will be ready? And will the Harvest be Positive, or Negative?

How do you justify that the current British royal family line is the true bloodline, but Ishmael is not the true receiver of Abraham's gift? If you're true bloodline, you'll know what I mean.

Who says it is the 'true' line? There were Ruling-Bloodlines long before your 'Yahweh' and his 'Christianity' arrived on this planet. Yahweh is 'a' Creator, not 'The' One Infinite Creator. There are other and Higher 'gods' than him. Ultimately, All, are a part of The One, and either consciously, or unconsciously, exercising their Free Will to Create. Begin to study 'outside of the box' for a True understanding of the Creation.

The British Royalty is not the most powerful line. The names that you know, do not hold the real ancient power. There are others above these lineages in the Hierarchy. You will not know the names of these lines.

OP, what proof do you have that "ruling elite families" exist and that your a member of one? Its something that I think you thought was not falsifiable, which is why you chose that identity for the story your weaving - however, I think there may indeed be a way you can prove it.

I have no need to prove anything to you. I am merely doing my duty as directed to me. Believe, or do not believe, we are divinely indifferent. I am obliged to complete this task here. The end result is of no consequence to me. I will have discharged my duty, in handing down certain information that must be released at this time. There is no stipulation as to where I do so, only that I do. I chose Above Top Secret, as the general level of intelligence, comprehension and reasoning is reckoned to be higher than in many such forums.

Understand, due to the Law of Free Will, I cannot just give you information, at least not without consequences to my own person which I would rather avoid. It is an infringement upon your Free Will, your right to not know. You have to ask me for the information you want, only then can I provide it. So whilst there are important things I have to share, if I am not asked the questions, I cannot get that information to you. I am hopeful that synchronicity will bring the most important questions of real 'depth' out from among you.

My duty is to offer. Yours is to ask. My duty is fulfilled, whether or not yours is.

Surely if ruling elite families exist and your a member of one then you must be controlling global events through world governments - tell us 1 major government action from any country that going to occur in the next 5 days.

I won't be surprised when you refuse to do so.

I am not at liberty to discuss such intimate immediate detail, and in many cases, I am not far enough up the Hierarchy to know anyway. Typically, I would receive a call a day before the enactment of a major event, just to say something along the lines of 'this part of such and such a plan will take place tomorrow, in such and such a way, do not be alarmed'. Also one has to take into account, the specific areas of specialty I mentioned previously. My area is in Spirituality, so my focus is not so much on Geo-Political events. I am aware of the overall design, though the finer points are not often my area of expertise.

I am prepared to give you some things coming down the timeline, that you will be able to look back upon, and verify my predictions retrospectively.

The Stock Markets will soon complete their controlled demolition. After an initial 'appearance' that the 'bail outs' and 'rescue packages' have steadied the ship, there will be new record lows by the end of the month.

Our Financial Institutions will later call in all loans. There will be many bankruptcies and foreclosures.

The only way John McCain will become the next US President, will be if something "happens" to Barack Obama before the election. If there even is an election. If a certain faction get their way, there will not be. Remember, behind the scenes, there is only One Party. Our Party. 'Democracy' is an illusion which is created to uphold your slavery. Whichever side 'wins'; the Family wins. There are many possibilities and alternative 'scripts'. All of them lead toward the ultimate implementation of the overall blueprint of our Creator,

Unless any unforeseen disruptions delay it's announcement, there will be a new currency by the end of 2008 / early 2009, along with a new Union of nations. January has been spoken of in some circles, as the latest, though there are plans underway which could even bring this to fruition much earlier than initially hoped for. It depends upon the results of other upcoming events as to how this will play out. I am not high enough up the Hierarchy to know the intimate details of the dates and times that far in advance. There is a 'tree system' in which such knowledge is passed down, as and when it becomes 'need to know'. I would be considered to be a "Regional" leader. Above me, are National and International.

San Francisco and Damascus, will be uninhabitable by the end of 2010, possibly even sooner. Again, it depends upon certain 'forces' at play, and which timelines are activated. Humanity, though utterly unconscious of the fact, has a significant part to play in this. You (as a collective consciousness of the planet) are choosing the Negative Polarization by default, by the quality of your thoughts and actions. Thought is creative energy, focused. You get exactly what you put out.

Why do you think the Media is so important to us? You have (as a society), in your hypnotized comatose state, given your Free Will consent to the state your planet is in today. You saturate your minds with the unhealthy dishes served up for you on your televisions that you are addicted to, violence, pornography, greed, hatred, selfishness, incessant 'bad news', fear and 'terror'. When was the last time you stopped, to think of something beautiful and pure? The planet is the way it is, because of your collective thoughts about it. You are complicit in your inaction, every time you 'look the other way' when you see an injustice. Your 'thought' at the sub-conscious level of creation to the Creator, is your allowance of these things to occur. In so doing, you are serving our purpose. It is very important to us, that the Polarization of this planet is Negative at the time of the Great Harvest. That means Service to Self orientated, as opposed to Positive, Service to Others. We require a Negative Harvest, and you are doing a fine job of helping us to attain our goal. We are very grateful.

There will be dramatic changes to your climate and weather conditions over the next few years, as the time of the Great Harvest approaches. You will see windspeeds surpassing 300 miles per hour at times. There will be raging tsunamis and widespread devastation; and a solar emission in late 2009 early 2010 that will cause major melting of the ice caps, and subsequent drastic rise in sea levels, leaving many (international) metropolitan areas underwater.

That is all I have time for at present. I have a Sacrifice I must attend now.
No, not really.

Let's see if we can increase the 'depth' of enquiry and question matter in the next session. Seek beyond the superficial. Get to the 'Core' of the matter.

For a bit of fun:

How do you know that your bloodline deserves to lead and the rest deserve to follow?
Wealth and power is self-propagating therefore I say to you that your bloodline only comprises the 'extreme elite' of the world because your ancestors came to power by chance in the beginning, not because your kind are special. In fact, there's nothing special, clever or honourable in enslaving others.

ITT we discuss known approaches for psychological manipulation of targets adapted to the 21st century. Specifically utilizing social media algorithms and radio stations (false radio station programs emitted in the target vicinity and picked up by target adjacent radios).

>Social media content designed to provide spiritual answers around the targets orchestrated situation

>Radio station programmes doing the exact same thing

>Orchestrated street theater

>Inner circle recruitment (effective in low socio economic standing individuals) >utilizing perceived scarcities in the targets life as a means of handling >friends to handlers pipeline

>Target AI cloning on social media to sell a false image, promoting isolation of target

> AI driven slander

>using all of the above to subconsciously manipulate the target into the hands of their handlers

There is a wide range of tools at the malicious actors disposal. Awareness of their existence and deployment is the very first line of defense as well as the very first step in countering them. You awareness and your consciousness is the primary battlefield.

Losing materially is a secondary issue.

Here's a few I know of:

1. Modulated signals to put a message in your brain. (Left ear sound) - (right ear sound) = (message heard only inside your brain). When done to a degree in the ultrasonic range you get havanna syndrome, but you can also implant messages without the subject knowing. It is used to achieve the theta state, like the gateway tapes. Only possible in digital format, so maybe not in radio, but definitely not in vinyl.
2. The AI on Instagram is hallucinating, daytime it's memes, nighttime it's esotericism and occultism telling you you're special. I get videos like this with no tags. Occasionally I get snippets of protests, the AI made an oopsie.
3. You're phone is definitely listening to you, I'm not getting paid for my date so it's being stolen and I retract from doing any survey or liking/disliking. They may not get to you, but you fit a profile and they sway people like you with certain advertisements using the AI to know when and what is the right content.

I was curious about linguistics, how do they hide hidden spells and Hebrew and secret meanings in English. There are symbols in video and spells in audio they prevent you from knowing about, like bible = by ba'al.

The image is a screenshot of a text excerpt from a news article. The text is in English and appears to be a report detailing the mental state of a 20-year-old individual who was involved in a shooting incident. The text mentions that the individual was described as "having conversations with someone that wasn't there" and that the incident was described as leading up to the shooting. The text also includes a quote from Thomas Crooks, the gunman in the July 2024 Donald Trump assassination attempt in Butler, Pennsylvania, who reportedly experienced a "descent into madness" and was described as "having conversations with someone that wasn't there" in the period leading up to the shooting. The text concludes with a statement that the information comes from a report detailing the mental state of the 20-year-old, indicating a severe decline in his mental health before the incident where he opened fire from a nearby rooftop, injuring Trump, killing one attendee, and wounding two others. The image is a simple, straightforward representation of the text, with no additional graphics or images present.

Radio stations and social media content lmao? That doesn't have anything to do with Zersetzung or gangstalking. Street theater is very rare and even a target in a rather extreme flavor of the program may only actually experience it once. Most of what targets deem "street theater" is subconscious manipulation convincing the target of something like "stranger on street is taking my picture". In reality the stranger is just on his phone and you've been gaslit into believing he's taking your picture in all of about 4 seconds with this tech. Street theater if it used frequently would almost always involve situations with the homeless or fent addicts.

2025 Zersetzung is entirely technological. All of the voice campaigns and subconscious manipulation is carried out through AI led brain interfaces. A thought that most targets have very early on sans the AI but it's such a horrible thought they refuse to believe it. They are assisted in not believing it by the technology for psychological abuse purposes. Your family knowing your darkest secrets and tormenting you about them vs. the government is infinitely more psychologically damaging and why it is framed as such. Framing family/friends/coworkers is also incredibly more effective than presenting as government in terms of getting the target to lash out and become associated with mental illness.

This technology for the most part sets up persecutory delusions where the delusions are not delusions but simulations and these simulations are only perceived by the target. Noise campaigns with an unknown fascinating technology are able to remotely bang or tap on objects. You might hear banging on the walls, your TV or computer monitor might make "clicking" sounds leading you to believe cameras have been installed into them. These noise campaigns are coupled with voice to skull in order to convince the target this is a boots on the ground operation.

The image displays a table with a title "Directed Energy Weapon 7: Targeted Individual Patterns" at the top, and a list of names and descriptions of various weapons and their associated patterns. The table is organized into two columns, with the left column listing names and the right column listing descriptions. The names are listed in alphabetical order, and the descriptions are in a list format, likely indicating the characteristics or features of each weapon.

The names listed in the left column are:

- "Directed Energy Weapon 1: Individual Patterns"
- "Directed Energy Weapon 2: Individual Patterns"
- "Directed Energy Weapon 3: Individual Patterns"
- "Directed Energy Weapon 4: Individual Patterns"
- "Directed Energy Weapon 5: Individual Patterns"
- "Directed Energy Weapon 6: Individual Patterns"
- "Directed Energy Weapon 7: Individual Patterns"

The names in the right column are:

- "Directed Energy Weapon 1: Individual Patterns"
- "Directed Energy Weapon 2: Individual Patterns"
- "Directed Energy Weapon 3: Individual Patterns"
- "Directed Energy Weapon 4: Individual Patterns"
- "Directed Energy Weapon 5: Individual Patterns"
- "Directed Energy Weapon 6: Individual Patterns"
- "Directed Energy Weapon 7: Individual Patterns"

The names and descriptions are in English, and the table is likely a part of a larger document or publication, possibly related to the field of weapons or military technology. The table is structured in a grid format, with each row representing a different weapon and its associated pattern, and each column representing a different pattern. The names and descriptions are likely to be used for educational or research purposes, providing a comprehensive overview of the characteristics and applications of these weapons.

Do not underestimate this shits ability to subconsciously influence. Targets must learn to recognize when this is being used before they stop thinking and acting like a full blown schizo and it usually takes a year or two for even an intelligent person to recognize that it's being used. It is the most heavily utilized facet of this technology and is present in every targets program unlike other facets like "voices" which are used on probably 5-10% of targeted individuals.

If you claim to be a targeted individual then I recommend that whenever the full blown schizoid thoughts start that you attempt to enter a state of immediate meditation or at least desperately trying to think of absolutely nothing. If you do this every time you will eventually notice how casually this shit can slip shit into your mind. It's noticeable while actively trying to think of nothing, it's impossible to notice while actively thinking about things.

One time around 2-3 AM while on a walk, I saw a white minivan quickly pull up next to a sign in front of a small field marked "NO TRESPASSING NO VEHICLES NO BICYCLES" and an entire family (mom dad & 3 kids) all rapidly got out and immediately unloaded 3 kids bikes and the kids just started riding in circles around the field in the dark. This all happened in a rapid sequence as soon as I got close to passing the NO TRESPASSING sign.

See what I mean? This is the subconscious influence I am talking about. They will cause you to associate things that are happening to gangstalking when the event is completely unrelated to you. Had you not been influenced by this technology, your thought would have been why the fuck is this family out riding bikes at 3am, you wouldn't have associated the event to you personally whatsoever. These are the coincidences and synchronicities that targets often describe. This technology will attempt to get you to associate anything negative, positive, or coincidental to their doing and it is nothing more than a psychological abuse tactic. Other common tactics include false hope, carrot on a stick, good cop bad cop, and most commonly psychic driving. These tactics are usually carried out through voice to skull. With subconscious manipulation the most common tactic is false association.

When it comes to this stuff and you're pondering the who what where and why you need to always ask yourself "would explaining this thought make me sound crazy". If the answer to that is yes, it's almost always the subconscious manipulation enforcing that belief.

Below the title, there is a list of names and contact information for the presenter. The first name is "Dr. Robert Finkelstein," followed by his title "President, Robotic Technology Inc." and his phone number "301-688-4141." The second name is "Robert Schultz, Robotics, Inc." and his phone number "301-688-4141." The third name is "Graduate School of Robotics Technology, University of Maryland University College" and the fourth name is "Social Media for Defense Summit Alexandria, Virginia." The date "24-28 October 2011" is also provided at the bottom of the slide.

The main visual content of the slide consists of two images. The first image is a blue-toned illustration of a brain with white and yellow neurons, surrounded by a halo of light, suggesting a brain-like structure. The second image is a close-up of a gorilla's face, with the gorilla's eyes closed and its mouth open, giving the impression of a contemplative or angry expression.

The slide also includes a red box with the text "This presentation is based on the presentation given at the Robotics Technology Inc. conference, performed for the Defense Agency DARPA, 2006-2008 and we thank DARPA for their vision and support." This text indicates that the presentation is a result of a DARPA-funded project and expresses gratitude for the support provided by DARPA.

Time is not linear. Time is like a mixed up ball of yarn. What is constant is change.

There is no monolithic absolute. There are several species of extraterrestrials manipulating this planet, with some of them having bases here.

>objective reality = data, which just is >scientific reality = information out of data, processing the data into useful information or products if viable >social reality = local common consensus which varies from location to location, commonly accepted reality

>subjective reality = your personal reality

What is socially relevant is that there are academics with their brains hijacked by decades old Soviet brainviruses while Soviet Union has been dismantled a long time ago. People being "aggressively compassionate"(cognitive dissonance anyone?), while a Somali is fleecing them out of their money.

Also, ancient Egyptians discovered the pyramids, they didn't build them.

The thinking material of the Living, Dead, Heavens and Hells is constantly changing to represent and facilitate their experiences. Most of this doesn't need to take place in the Mortal Realm though, so only a limited amount of the thinking material of the Mortal Realm needs to be changed to achieve the holy goal. Many miracles are mere generations away, levitation will be possible. Thought can manipulate gravity, mass, and other things. To sacrifice of oneself brain cells and other tiny parts to further one's abilities, including occult, is only natural, all abilities learnt take sacrifice.

There is a field over all of Creation that prevents anything the Lord God Almighty wouldn't allow via occult powers, which is something we're working on building but it's coming along great. Satan had it's hands in nature from the beginning, in physics, but we will set it right. Only small changes need made.

I program in myself tells for when occult work is completed, tells that speak to me in a way where I can't deny them. I could do this for more people I change so they know more when occult things are happening but they don't like that one, when a belief can come over you and you can't fight it, so they mostly won't let me install that in them. So be it, with enough occult work they will notice and, strictly speaking, they don't need to notice for it to work.

Any and all help you provide is fool-proof, if ranging in quality. If it would result in something against the Almighty will it doesn't fly, if it leads to great things it takes off fine if possibly changed.

The secret truth is that it is holy to engage in spiritual warfare against one another with telekinesis and bending of gravity, destruction of thinking material and it's creation. Whether the fulfillment of the wishes of your target or the punishment of their sins, it wouldn't work unless they deserved it, and if it doesn't work it can still serve as practice and does because of the foolproof way the system is built.

There are universes beyond universes and places inbetween with life, and the realms of the Dead and The Heavens and Hells are more vast. To stoke my ego, to train myself to behave as who I am, for stress relief, I sometimes beat up entire categories of dead people and modify how they think somewhat to suit my purposes better and I don't even say thanks for sucking me off.

A year ago I pitched ideas for occult work that people could do, cells they could create, and they did with some, but with others they did not and it's been a year...I prepared the way so that animals and plants can do it for us where I've been waiting a year on some things, the animals and plants like those agreements because they're afraid I'll use them like the rest of the people do and they don't want to be used. They know they'll be spiritually rewarded though for what they help me do. They have an intrinsic respect for the fact I can place thoughts and cells inside of them and they can't stop me, gives them a certain assumption about how they should approach me.

Changes have just been made to plants and animals this planet and others, and some of you and some others not of this website were adjusted to react to this in the loosh so that a tiny portion of your nervous system learned from the experience and will react to it more strongly for a time when such similar events happen in the future, which can be very useful for me. Some of my wayward students "cursed" people who use these occult powers to change cells to feel as if their results are, if they're actually convinced of them, extra effective, in the hopes of convincing the occultist that less needs done and fool them. I can manipulate this for useful purposes and to make our lessons easier to learn.

this means reality transcends physics (limitations)

Thus the origin of everything is chaos, and chaos is defined as nothingness as well as everything (void)

Void/curse is the hidden element

And when nothing exists at all, the only thing that can exist in such an environment is consciousness

The main visual content of the slide consists of two images. The first image is a blue-toned illustration of a brain with white and yellow neurons, surrounded by a halo of light, suggesting a brain-like structure. The second image is a close-up of a gorilla's face, with the gorilla's eyes closed and its mouth open, giving the impression of a contemplative or angry expression.

The slide also includes a red box with the text "This presentation is based on the presentation given at the Robotics Technology Inc. conference, performed for the Defense Agency DARPA, 2006-2008 and we thank DARPA for their vision and support." This text indicates that the presentation is a result of a DARPA-funded project and expresses gratitude for the support provided by DARPA.

The document is from the Naval Postgraduate School in Monterey, California, and was uploaded to the NPS Archive. The document is dated 2015-03 and is numbered as 2015-03. The document is a thesis and dissertation collection, as indicated by the heading "Theses and Dissertations" at the top of the page. The document is presented in a formal academic style, with a title, author's name, and institutional affiliation. The document is in black and white, and the background is a simple, unadorned white. The text is in a serif font, which is typical for academic papers. The document is structured with a clear header and a footer, with the header being the title and the footer being the author's name and the institution's name. The document is a scanned image, and the quality of the image is good, with no visible defects or distortions.

The image displays the cover of a book titled "THE ART OF EMERGENCIES" by Robert W. Wilson. The cover art is a stylized, abstract representation of a face with expressive, dynamic lines and shapes. The background is a warm, earthy color, possibly orange or brown, which contrasts with the face's features. The text is in a bold, serif font and is positioned at the top of the cover, with the title "THE ART OF EMERGENCIES" in a larger, bold font. Below the title, the author's name "Robert W. Wilson" is presented in a smaller, regular font. At the bottom of the cover, the word "DIAGONAL" is written in a smaller, bold font, indicating that this is the "DIAGONAL" edition of the book. The overall style of the image is graphic and artistic, with a focus on the cover design.

The image is a book cover with a predominantly purple and gold color scheme. The title of the book is displayed in large, bold, purple letters at the top of the cover. Below the title, the subtitle "Practical Guide to" is written in smaller, black letters. The author's name, "Denning & Phillips," is presented in a smaller font size and is located at the bottom of the cover. The cover also features a circular design with a gradient of purple and gold colors, which appears to be a stylized representation of a aura or a light source. The overall style of the image is that of a self-help or metaphysical book, with a focus on self-defense techniques.

Time is not linear. Time is like a mixed up ball of yarn. What is constant is change.

There is no monolithic absolute. There are several species of extraterrestrials manipulating this planet, with some of them having bases here.

>scientific reality = inofrmation out of data, processing the data into useful information or products if viable

>social reality = local common consensus which varies from location to location, commonly accepted reality

>subjective reality = your personal reality

What is socially relevant is that there are academics with their brains hijacked by decades old Soviet brainviruses while Soviet Union has been dismantled a long time ago. People being "aggressively compassionate"(cognitive dissonance anyone?), while a Somali is fleecing them out of their money.

Also, ancient Egyptians discovered the pyramids, they didn't build them.

The thinking material of the Living, Dead, Heavens and Hells is constantly changing to represent and facilitate their experiences. Most of this doesn't need to take place in the Mortal Realm though, so only a limited amount of the thinking material of the Mortal Realm needs to be changed to achieve the holy goal. Many miracles are mere generations away, levitation will be possible. Thought can manipulate gravity, mass, and other things. To sacrifice of oneself brain cells and other tiny parts to further one's abilities, including occult, is only natural, all abilities learnt take sacrifice.

There is a field over all of Creation that prevents anything the Lord God Almighty wouldn't allow via occult powers, which is something we're working on building but it's coming along great. Satan had it's hands in nature from the beginning, in physics, but we will set it right. Only small changes need made.

I program in myself tells for when occult work is completed, tells that speak to me in a way where I can't deny them. I could do this for more people I change so they know more when occult things are happening but they don't like that one, when a belief can come over you and you can't fight it, so they mostly won't let me install that in them. So be it, with enough occult work they will notice and, strictly speaking, they don't need to notice for it to work.

Any and all help you provide is fool-proof, if ranging in quality. If it would result in something against the Almighty will it doesn't fly, if it leads to great things it takes off fine if possibly changed.

The secret truth is that it is holy to engage in spiritual warfare against one another with telekinesis and bending of gravity, destruction of thinking material and it's creation. Whether the fulfillment of the wishes of your target or the punishment of their sins, it wouldn't work unless they deserved it, and if it doesn't work it can still serve as practice and does because of the foolproof way the system is built.

There are universes beyond universes and places inbetween with life, and the realms of the Dead and The Heavens and Hells are more vast. To stoke my ego, to train myself to behave as who I am, for stress relief, I sometimes beat up entire categories of dead people and modify how they think somewhat to suit my purposes better and I don't even say thanks for sucking me off.

A year ago I pitched ideas for occult work that people could do, cells they could create, and they did with some, but with others they did not and it's been a year...I prepared the way so that animals and plants can do it for us where I've been waiting a year on some things, the animals and plants like those agreements because they're afraid I'll use them like the rest of the people do and they don't want to be used. They know they'll be spiritually rewarded though for what they help me do. They have an intrinsic respect for the fact I can place thoughts and cells inside of them and they can't stop me, gives them a certain assumption about how they should approach me.

Changes have just been made to plants and animals this planet and others, and some of you and some others not of this website were adjusted to react to this in the loosh so that a tiny portion of your nervous system learned from the experience and will react to it more strongly for a time when such similar events happen in the future, which can be very useful for me. Some of my wayward students "cursed" people who use these occult powers to change cells to feel as if their results are, if they're actually convinced of them, extra effective, in the hopes of convincing the occultist that less needs done and fool them. I can manipulate this for useful purposes and to make our lessons easier to learn.

Anna's Archive loses .org domain, says suspension likely unrelated to Spotify piracy
"We don't believe this has to do with our Spotify backup," Anna's Archive says.

The primary domain of Shadow library Anna's Archive was taken offline, with annas-archive.org being put under the serverHold status. While Anna's Archive recently made waves with a massive "backup" of Spotify, the shadow library's operator said the music pirating doesn't appear to be connected to the .org domain suspension. Anna's Archive remains available at several other domains.

Anna's Archive launched in 2022 in response to the US Department of Justice seizure of domains used by e-book pirate site Z-Library. Acting as a shadow library and a search engine for other shadow libraries, Anna's Archive aims to archive books and other written materials and make them widely available via torrents. Its data sets have also been heavily used by AI companies to train large language models.

In addition to mirroring shadow libraries such as Sci-Hub, Library Genesis, and Z-Library, Anna's Archive made a major move into music pirating two weeks ago with an announcement that it scraped Spotify and made a 300TB copy of the most streamed songs. Despite that development, the person behind Anna's Archive said the domain suspension doesn't seem to be related to the Spotify scraping.

"The .org domain apparently has been suspended," Anna's Archive said in a post on Reddit yesterday. "Our other domains work fine, and we've added some more. We recommend checking our Wikipedia page for the latest domains. This unfortunately happens to shadow libraries on a regular basis. We don't believe this has to do with our Spotify backup." The Reddit post ended with a request for donations.

The serverHold designation is a status code set by the domain's registry operator and means the “domain is not activated in the DNS,” according to the Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers (ICANN).

Legal problems

As TorrentFreak writes, “It is rare to see a .org domain involved in domain name suspensions. The American non-profit Public Interest Registry (PIR), which oversees the .org domains, previously refused to suspend domain names voluntarily, including thepiratebay.org. The registry’s cautionary stance suggests that the actions against annas-archive.org are backed by a court order.”

A spokesperson for the Public Interest Registry told Ars that “PIR is unable to comment on the situation at this time.”

Anna’s Archive’s domain registrar is Tucows. A Tucows spokesperson told Ars that “server-type statuses can only be set by the registry (PIR, in this case).” Tucows also said it doesn’t have any information on what led to the Anna’s Archive serverHold. “PIR has not contacted us about it and we were unaware of the status before you alerted us to it,” a Tucows spokesperson said.

After last month’s Spotify incident, Spotify told Ars that it “identified and disabled the nefarious user accounts that engaged in unlawful scraping” and “implemented new safeguards for these types of anti-copyright attacks.” We asked Spotify today if it has taken any additional steps against Anna’s Archive and will update this article if it provides a response.

Anna’s Archive is also facing a lawsuit from OCLC, a nonprofit that operates the WorldCat library catalog on behalf of member libraries. The lawsuit alleges that Anna’s Archive “illegally hacked WorldCat.org” to steal 2.2TB of data.

An OCLC motion for default judgment filed in November asked for a permanent injunction prohibiting Anna’s Archive from scraping or distributing WorldCat data and requiring Anna’s Archive to delete all its copies of WorldCat data. OCLC said it hopes such a judgment would compel web hosting services to take action.

“OCLC hopes to take the judgment to website hosting services so that OCLC’s WorldCat data will be removed from Anna’s Archive’s websites,” said the November 17 motion filed in US District Court for the Southern District of Ohio. The court has not yet ruled on the motion.

The image is a black and white line drawing that depicts a series of six panels, each showing a different interaction between a character and a group of other characters. The character in the center of the image is holding up a thumbs-up sign, indicating a positive or encouraging gesture. Surrounding this central figure are several other characters, some of whom are also holding up their thumbs-up signs, suggesting a shared positive sentiment. The other characters are depicted in a variety of poses, with some standing upright and others in a seated position, indicating a casual and relaxed atmosphere. The style of the drawing is simple and cartoon-like, with simple lines and shapes that convey the characters' expressions and body language. There are no texts or additional elements in the image.

The image is a diagram that illustrates the concept of self-other distinction and intersubjectivity. It is divided into two main sections, labeled "a) Intact self-other distinction" and "b) Impaired self-other distinction."

In the "a) Intact self-other distinction" section, there are two blue circles labeled "Self" and "Other." The "Self" circle is connected to the "Other" circle by a blue line, indicating a direct relationship between the two. The "Other" circle is connected to the "Self" circle by a blue line, suggesting a reciprocal relationship.

The "b) Impaired self-other distinction" section shows a different arrangement of the circles. The "Self" circle is connected to the "Other" circle by a blue line, indicating a direct relationship between the two. The "Other" circle is connected to the "Self" circle by a blue line, suggesting a reciprocal relationship.

The diagram also includes a flowchart that illustrates the process of self-other co-representation. The flowchart shows a cycle where the "Self" circle is connected to the "Other" circle by a blue line, indicating a direct relationship between the two. The "Other" circle is connected to the "Self" circle by a blue line, suggesting a reciprocal relationship.

The diagram also includes a flowchart that illustrates the process of self-other co-regulation of emotion, social learning, and intersubjectivity. The flowchart shows a cycle where the "Self" circle is connected to the "Other" circle by a blue line, indicating a direct relationship between the two. The "Other" circle is connected to the "Self" circle by a blue line, suggesting a reciprocal relationship.

The diagram is a visual representation of the concept of self-other distinction and intersubjectivity, using circles and lines to illustrate the relationships between different self-other representations.

The image is a painting that depicts a figure with a long beard and a hooded cloak, holding a staff with a distinctive design. The figure's face is obscured by the hood, and the eyes are visible through the hood, giving the impression of a mysterious or contemplative expression. The figure's attire includes a dark cloak and a robe, suggesting a sense of mystery or a role of authority. The background is dark and indistinct, with a red and black color scheme that contrasts with the figure's dark attire. The painting style is expressive and detailed, with visible brushstrokes that add texture and depth to the image. There are no texts present in the image.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a character with a predominantly purple and pink color scheme. The character has long, flowing hair that cascades down her back, and her eyes are a striking shade of yellow with a gradient effect that transitions from a darker shade at the center to a lighter one at the outer edges. The character's face is characterized by a wide smile, and her expression is one of contentment or joy. She has a neutral expression with no visible facial features, and her hair is styled in a way that it appears to be flowing freely.

The background of the image is a gradient of purple and pink hues, with a darker purple at the top and a lighter pink at the bottom. This creates a sense of depth and adds to the overall aesthetic of the image. The character's eyes are the focal point of the image, drawing the viewer's attention with their vibrant color and contrasting gradient.

In the bottom right corner of the image, there is a signature that reads "Cloy," which is likely the artist's name. The signature is in a simple, unembellished font, which complements the overall minimalist and artistic style of the image. And that shearing crack, of 30 years of self loathing and paranoia shearing off of your soul like an iceberg, that has such a profound effect on you that you just can't deny it. The body will react to this much faster than the mind or ego, and you will know it. Often in movies, catharsis is jubilant. When this kind of thing finally happens to you, it will twist your body and wrack you with shuddering sobs and tensing, seizing muscle, rictus grin. But afterwards, you feel different, and better, somehow. And you will know the feeling that follows, when you finally uncoil your muscles and untense your nerves, and you finally feel like you're growing into your own soul. And the feeling that a presence has departed. But really, anyone could write anything, and we'd never know what's true.

The image is a black and white photograph featuring a man dressed in a Superman costume. The man is standing against a plain background, which emphasizes the costume and the cape. He is wearing a Superman costume that includes a white shirt with a large, stylized "S" emblem on the chest, black pants, and a cape that extends behind him. The cape is draped over his left shoulder and extends to the ground. The man's expression is serious, and he is looking directly at the camera. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the photograph is reminiscent of classic black and white portraits, with a focus on the subject and the costume.

The image is likely used to illustrate the difference between normal and Sanpaku eyes, with the Sanpaku eyes being characterized by a significant white part between the iris and the eyelid. The text and the circular format of the eyes are consistent across both sections, providing a clear visual comparison between the two eye types.

Secrecy means the Right Christcuck ignoramuses can't attack it and use judicial means to murder people who practice it yet again. They are still dangerous! It keeps the spiritual entrepreneurs from stealing it, packaging it, and monopolizing it. It keeps scientists from mainstreaming it so the government can regulate and tax it, and charge practitioners for fraud. That's why the pros are ordained and have their own churches — it keeps zealous 'Chrstains' and their legal harassment at arms length.

The image is a black and white photograph featuring a man dressed in a Superman costume. The man is standing against a plain background, which emphasizes the costume and the cape. He is wearing a Superman costume that includes a white shirt with a large, stylized "S" emblem on the chest, black pants, and a cape that extends behind him. The cape is draped over his left shoulder and extends to the ground. The man's expression is serious, and he is looking directly at the camera. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the photograph is reminiscent of classic black and white portraits, with a focus on the subject and the costume.

The image is a graphic with a red background and a silhouette of a person with a sinister expression. The silhouette is dark and appears to be a stylized representation of a humanoid figure, with a pointed chin and a small, pointed ear. The person's eyes are glowing red, and there is a small, curved line running from the top of the head down to the chin, which could be interpreted as a smile or a grimace.

Below the silhouette, there is a line of text in white font that reads, "There stood an ominous man with an evil face of ill portent." The text is centered and appears to be a quote or a description of the figure in the silhouette. The style of the image is reminiscent of a horror or dark fantasy genre, with the use of red and the silhouette of the figure being the primary visual elements.

Who are you to say otherwise? This is why I can't take occultists serious. This world is clearly in need of a hero, and pussies like you who are afraid to rock the boat are the reason why nothing ever gets done. You will burn in hell you coward.

The left section shows a pair of eyes with a normal appearance, with no white part visible between the iris and the eyelid. The right section shows a pair of eyes with a Sanpaku appearance, with a significant white part visible between the iris and the eyelid. The caption for the left section reads, "No white part is visible between the iris and the eyelid." The caption for the right section reads, "Significant white part is visible between the iris and the eyelid."

The image is likely used to illustrate the difference between normal and Sanpaku eyes, with the Sanpaku eyes being characterized by a significant white part between the iris and the eyelid. The text and the circular format of the eyes are consistent across both sections, providing a clear visual comparison between the two eye types.

Secrecy means the Right Christcuck ignoramuses can't attack it and use judicial means to murder people who practice it yet again. They are still dangerous! It keeps the spiritual entrepreneurs from stealing it, packaging it, and monopolizing it. It keeps scientists from mainstreaming it so the government can regulate and tax it, and charge practitioners for fraud. That's why the pros are ordained and have their own churches — it keeps zealous 'Chrstains' and their legal harassment at arms length.

Research

Toward a real-time decoding of images from brain activity

October 18, 2023

3 minute read

At every moment of every day, our brains meticulously sculpt a wealth of sensory signals into meaningful representations of the world around us. Yet how this continuous process actually works remains poorly understood.

Today, Meta is announcing an important milestone in the pursuit of that fundamental question. Using magnetoencephalography (MEG), a non-invasive neuroimaging technique in which thousands of brain activity measurements are taken per second, we showcase an AI system capable of decoding the unfolding of visual representations in the brain with an unprecedented temporal resolution.

Using AI to decode speech from brain activity

Studying the brain to build AI that processes language as people do

This AI system can be deployed in real time to reconstruct, from brain activity, the images perceived and processed by the brain at each instant. This opens up an important avenue to help the scientific community understand how images are represented in the brain, and then used as foundations of human intelligence. Longer term, it may also provide a stepping stone toward non-invasive brain-computer interfaces in a clinical setting that could help people who, after suffering a brain lesion, have lost their ability to speak.

Leveraging our recent architecture trained to decode speech perception from MEG signals, we develop a three-part system consisting of an image encoder, a brain encoder, and an image decoder. The image encoder builds a rich set of representations of the image independently of the brain. The brain encoder then learns to align MEG signals to these image embeddings. Finally, the image decoder generates a plausible image given these brain representations.

MEG recordings are continuously aligned to the deep representation of the images, which can then condition the generation of images at each instant.

We train this architecture on a public dataset of MEG recordings acquired from healthy volunteers and released by Things, an international consortium of academic researchers sharing experimental data based on the same image database.

We first compare the decoding performance obtained with a variety of pretrained image modules and show that the brain signals best align with modern computer vision AI systems like DINOv2, a recent self-supervised architecture able to learn rich visual representations without any human annotations. This result confirms that self-supervised learning leads AI systems to learn brain-like representations: The artificial neurons in the algorithm tend to be activated similarly to the physical neurons of the brain in response to the same image.

This functional alignment between such AI systems and the brain can then be used to guide the generation of an image similar to what the participants see in the scanner. While our results show that images are better decoded with functional Magnetic Resonance Imaging (fMRI), our MEG decoder can be used at every instant of time and thus produces a continuous flux of images decoded from brain activity.

While the generated images remain imperfect, the results suggest that the reconstructed image preserves a rich set of high-level features, such as object categories. However, the AI system often generates inaccurate low-level features by misplacing or mis-orienting some objects in the generated images. In particular, using the Natural Scene Dataset, we show that images generated from MEG decoding remain less precise than the decoding obtained with fMRI, a comparably slow-paced but spatially precise neuroimaging technique.

Overall, our results show that MEG can be used to decipher, with millisecond precision, the rise of complex representations generated in the brain. More generally, this research strengthens Meta's long-term research initiative to understand the foundations of human intelligence, identify its similarities as well as differences compared to current machine learning algorithms, and ultimately guide the development of AI systems designed to learn and reason like humans.

Magnetoencephalography

MeSH D015225

Magnetoencephalography (MEG) is a functional neuroimaging technique for mapping brain activity by recording magnetic fields produced by electrical currents occurring naturally in the brain, using very sensitive magnetometers. Arrays of SQUIDs (superconducting quantum interference devices) are currently the most common magnetometer, while the SERF (spin exchange relaxation-free) magnetometer is being investigated for future machines.[1][2] Applications of MEG include basic research into perceptual and cognitive brain processes, localizing regions affected by pathology before surgical removal, determining the function of various parts of the brain, and neurofeedback. This can be applied in a clinical setting to find locations of abnormalities as well as in an experimental setting to simply measure brain activity.[3]

History

Dr. Cohen's shielded room at MIT, in which first MEG was measured with a SQUID

First MEG measured with SQUID, in Dr. Cohen's room at MIT
MEG signals were first measured by University of Illinois physicist David Cohen in 1968,[4] before the availability of the SQUID, using a copper induction coil as the detector. To reduce the magnetic background noise, the measurements were made in a magnetically shielded room. The coil detector was barely sensitive enough, resulting in poor, noisy MEG measurements that were difficult to use. Later, Cohen built a much better shielded room at MIT, and used one of the first SQUID detectors, just developed by James E. Zimmerman, a researcher at Ford Motor Company,[5] to again measure MEG signals.[6] This time the signals were almost as clear as those of EEG. This stimulated the interest of physicists who had been looking for uses of SQUIDs. Subsequent to this, various types of spontaneous and evoked MEGs began to be measured.

At first, a single SQUID detector was used to successively measure the magnetic field at a number of points around the subject's head. This was cumbersome, and, in the 1980s, MEG manufacturers began to arrange multiple sensors into arrays to cover a larger area of the head.[7] Present-day MEG arrays are set in a helmet-shaped vacuum flask that typically contain 300 sensors, covering most of the head. In this way, MEGs of a subject or patient can now be accumulated rapidly and efficiently.

Recent developments attempt to increase portability of MEG scanners by using spin exchange relaxation-free (SERF) magnetometers. SERF magnetometers are relatively small, as they do not require bulky cooling systems to operate. At the same time, they feature sensitivity equivalent to that of SQUIDS. In 2012, it was demonstrated that MEG could work with a chip-scale atomic magnetometer (CSAM, type of SERF).[8] More recently, in 2017, researchers built a working prototype that uses SERF magnetometers installed into portable individually 3D-printed helmets,[2] which they noted in interviews could be replaced with something easier to use in future, such as a bike helmet.

The basis of the MEG signal

Synchronized neuronal currents induce weak magnetic fields. The brain's magnetic field, measuring at 10 femtotesla (fT) for cortical activity and 103 fT for the human alpha rhythm, is considerably smaller than the ambient magnetic noise in an urban environment, which is on the order of 108 fT or 0.1 μ T. The essential problem of biomagnetism is, thus, the weakness of the signal relative to the sensitivity of the detectors, and to the competing environmental noise.

Origin of the brain's magnetic field. The electric current also produces the EEG signal. The MEG (and EEG) signals derive from the net effect of ionic currents flowing in the dendrites of neurons during synaptic transmission. In accordance with Maxwell's equations, any electrical current will produce a magnetic field, and it is this field that is measured. The net currents can be thought of as current dipoles,[1] i.e. currents with a position, orientation, and magnitude, but which don't follow the spatial extent of the actual currents in the neural tissue, but arise from their summation. According to the right-hand rule, a current dipole gives rise to a magnetic field that points around the axis of its vector component.

To generate a signal that is detectable, approximately 50,000 active neurons are needed.[9] Since current dipoles must have similar orientations to generate magnetic fields that reinforce each other, it is often the layer of pyramidal cells, which are situated perpendicular to the cortical surface, that gives rise to measurable magnetic fields. Bundles of these neurons that are orientated tangentially to the scalp surface project measurable portions of their magnetic fields outside of the head, and these bundles are typically located in the sulci. Researchers are experimenting with various signal processing methods in the search for methods that detect deep brain (i.e., non-cortical) signal, but no clinically useful method is currently available.

It is worth noting that action potentials do not usually produce an observable field, mainly because the currents associated with action potentials flow in opposite directions and the magnetic fields cancel out. However, action fields have been measured from peripheral nerve system.

Magnetic shielding

Since the magnetic signals emitted by the brain are on the order of a few femtoteslas, shielding from external magnetic signals, including the Earth's magnetic field, is necessary. Appropriate magnetic shielding can be obtained by constructing rooms made of aluminium and mu-metal for reducing high-frequency and low-frequency noise, respectively.

Entrance to MSR, showing the separate shielding layers

Magnetically shielded room (MSR)

A magnetically shielded room (MSR) model consists of three nested main layers. Each of these layers is made of a pure aluminium layer plus a high-permeability ferromagnetic layer, similar in composition to molybdenum permalloy. The ferromagnetic layer is supplied as 1 mm sheets, while the innermost layer is composed of four sheets in close contact, and the outer two layers are composed of three sheets each. Magnetic continuity is maintained by overlay strips. Insulating washers are used in the screw assemblies to ensure that each main layer is electrically isolated. This helps eliminate radio frequency radiation, which would degrade SQUID performance. Electrical continuity of the aluminium is also maintained by aluminium overlay strips to ensure AC eddy current shielding, which is important at frequencies greater than 1 Hz. The junctions of the inner layer are often electroplated with silver or gold to improve conductivity of the aluminium layers.[10]

Active shielding system

Active systems are designed for three-dimensional noise cancellation. To implement an active system, low-noise fluxgate magnetometers are mounted at the center of each surface and oriented orthogonally to it. This negatively feeds a DC amplifier through a low-pass network with a slow falloff to minimize positive feedback and oscillation. Built into the system are shaking and degaussing wires. Shaking wires increase the magnetic permeability, while the permanent degaussing wires are applied to all surfaces of the inner main layer to degauss the surfaces.[4] Moreover, noise cancellation algorithms can reduce both low-frequency and high-frequency noise. Modern systems have a noise floor of around 2–3 fT/Hz^{0.5} above 1 Hz.

Source localization

Main article: Inverse problem

The challenge posed by MEG is to determine the location of electric activity within the brain from the induced magnetic fields outside the head. Problems such as this, where model parameters (the location of the activity) have to be estimated from measured data (the SQUID signals) are referred to as inverse problems (in contrast to forward problems[11] where the model parameters (e.g. source location) are known and the data (e.g. the field at a given distance) is to be estimated.) The primary difficulty is that the inverse problem does not have a unique solution (i.e., there are infinite possible "correct" answers), and the problem of defining the "best" solution is itself the subject of intensive research.[12] Possible solutions can be derived using models involving prior knowledge of brain activity.

The source models can be either over-determined or under-determined. An over-determined model may consist of a few point-like sources ("equivalent dipoles"), whose locations are then estimated from the data. Under-determined models may be used in cases where many different distributed areas are activated ("distributed source solutions"): there are infinitely many possible current distributions explaining the measurement results, but the most likely is selected. Localization algorithms make use of given source and head models to find a likely location for an underlying focal field generator.

One type of localization algorithm for overdetermined models operates by expectation-maximization: the system is initialized with a first guess. A loop is started, in which a forward model is used to simulate the magnetic field that would result from the current guess. The guess is adjusted to reduce the discrepancy between the simulated field and the measured field. This process is iterated until convergence.

Another common technique is beamforming, wherein a theoretical model of the magnetic field produced by a given current dipole is used as a prior, along with second-order statistics of the data in the form of a covariance matrix, to calculate a linear weighting of the sensor array (the beamformer) via the Backus-Gilbert inverse. This is also known as a linearly constrained minimum variance (LCMV) beamformer. When the beamformer is applied to the data, it produces an estimate of the power in a "virtual channel" at the source location.

The extent to which the constraint-free MEG inverse problem is ill-posed cannot be overemphasized. If one's goal is to estimate the current density within the human brain with say a 5mm resolution then it is well established that the vast majority of the information needed to perform a unique inversion must come not from the magnetic field measurement but rather from the constraints applied to the problem. Furthermore, even when a unique inversion is possible in the presence of such constraints said inversion can be unstable. These conclusions are easily deduced from published works.[13]

The source locations can be combined with magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) images to create magnetic source images (MSI). The two sets of data are combined by measuring the location of a common set of fiducial points marked during MRI with lipid markers and marked during MEG with electrified coils of wire that give off magnetic fields. The locations of the fiducial points in each data set are then used to define a common coordinate system so that superimposing the functional MEG data onto the structural MRI data ("coregistration") is possible.

A criticism of the use of this technique in clinical practice is that it produces colored areas with definite boundaries superimposed upon an MRI scan: the untrained viewer may not realize that the colors do not represent a physiological certainty, not because of the relatively low spatial resolution of MEG, but rather some inherent uncertainty in the probability cloud derived from statistical processes. However, when the magnetic source image corroborates other data, it can be of clinical utility.

Dipole model source localization

A widely accepted source-modeling technique for MEG involves calculating a set of equivalent current dipoles (ECDs), which assumes the underlying neuronal sources to be focal. This dipole fitting procedure is non-linear and over-determined, since the number of unknown dipole parameters is smaller than the number of MEG measurements.[14] Automated multiple dipole model algorithms such as multiple signal classification (MUSIC) and multi-start spatial and temporal modeling (MSST) are applied to the analysis of MEG responses. The limitations of dipole models for characterizing neuronal responses are (1) difficulties in localizing extended sources with ECDs, (2) problems with accurately estimating the total number of dipoles in advance, and (3) dependency on dipole location, especially depth in the brain.

Distributed source models

Unlike multiple-dipole modeling, distributed source models divide the source space into a grid containing a large number of dipoles. The inverse problem is to obtain the dipole moments for the grid nodes.[15] As the number of unknown dipole moments is much greater than the number of MEG sensors, the inverse solution is highly underdetermined, so additional constraints are needed to reduce ambiguity of the solution. The primary advantage of this approach is that no prior specification of the source model is necessary. However, the resulting distributions may be difficult to interpret, because they only reflect a "blurred" (or even distorted) image of the true neuronal source distribution. The matter is complicated by the fact that spatial resolution depends strongly on various parameters such as brain area, depth, orientation, number of sensors etc.[16]

Independent component analysis (ICA)

Independent component analysis (ICA) is another signal processing solution that separates different signals that are statistically independent in time. It is primarily used to remove artifacts such as blinking, eye muscle movement, facial muscle artifacts, cardiac artifacts, etc. from MEG and EEG signals that may be contaminated with outside noise.[17] However, ICA has poor resolution of highly correlated brain sources.

Use in the field

Over 100 MEG systems are known to operate worldwide, with Japan possessing the greatest number of MEG systems per capita and the United States possessing the greatest overall number of MEG systems. A very small number of systems worldwide are designed for infant and/or fetal recordings.

In research, MEG's primary use is the measurement of time courses of activity. MEG can resolve events with a precision of 10 milliseconds or faster, while functional magnetic resonance imaging (fMRI), which depends on changes in blood flow, can at best resolve events with a precision of several hundred milliseconds. MEG also accurately pinpoints sources in primary auditory, somatosensory, and motor areas. For creating functional maps of human cortex during more complex cognitive tasks, MEG is most often combined with fMRI, as the methods complement each other. Neuronal

(MEG) and hemodynamic fMRI data do not necessarily agree, in spite of the tight relationship between local field potentials (LFP) and blood oxygenation level-dependent (BOLD) signals. MEG and BOLD signals may originate from the same source (though the BOLD signals are filtered through the hemodynamic response).

MEG is also being used to better localize responses in the brain. The openness of the MEG setup allows external auditory and visual stimuli to be easily introduced. Some movement by the subject is also possible as long as it does not jar the subject's head. The responses in the brain before, during, and after the introduction of such stimuli/movement can then be mapped with greater spatial resolution than was previously possible with EEG.[18] Psychologists are also taking advantage of MEG neuroimaging to better understand relationships between brain function and behavior. For example, a number of studies have been done comparing the MEG responses of patients with psychological troubles to control patients. There has been great success isolating unique responses in patients with schizophrenia, such as auditory gating deficits to human voices.[19] MEG is also being used to correlate standard psychological responses, such as the emotional dependence of language comprehension.[20]

Recent studies have reported successful classification of patients with multiple sclerosis, Alzheimer's disease, schizophrenia, Sjögren's syndrome, chronic alcoholism, facial pain and thalamocortical dysrhythmias. MEG can be used to distinguish these patients from healthy control subjects, suggesting a future role of MEG in diagnostics.[21][22]

A large part of the difficulty and cost of using MEG is the need for manual analysis of the data. Progress has been made in analysis by computer, comparing a patient's scans with those drawn from a large database of normal scans, with the potential to reduce cost greatly.[23]

Brain connectivity and neural oscillations

Based on its perfect temporal resolution, magnetoencephalography (MEG) is now heavily used to study oscillatory activity in the brain, both in terms of local neural synchrony and cross-area synchronisation. As an example for local neural synchrony, MEG has been used to investigate alpha rhythms in various targeted brain regions, such as in visual[24][25] or auditory cortex.[26] Other studies have used MEG to study the neural interactions between different brain regions (e.g., between frontal cortex and visual cortex).[27] Magnetoencephalography can also be used to study changes in neural oscillations across different stages of consciousness, such as in sleep.[28]

Focal epilepsy

The clinical uses of MEG are in detecting and localizing pathological activity in patients with epilepsy, and in localizing eloquent cortex for surgical planning in patients with brain tumors or intractable epilepsy. The goal of epilepsy surgery is to remove the epileptogenic tissue while sparing healthy brain areas.[29] Knowing the exact position of essential brain regions (such as the primary motor cortex and primary sensory cortex, visual cortex, and areas involved in speech production and comprehension) helps to avoid surgically induced neurological deficits. Direct cortical stimulation and somatosensory evoked potentials recorded on electrocorticography (ECoG) are considered the gold standard for localizing essential brain regions. These procedures can be performed either intraoperatively or from chronically indwelling subdural grid electrodes. Both are invasive.

Noninvasive MEG localizations of the central sulcus obtained from somatosensory evoked magnetic fields show strong agreement with these invasive recordings.[30][31][32] MEG studies assist in clarification of the functional organization of primary somatosensory cortex and to delineate the spatial extent of hand somatosensory cortex by stimulation of the individual digits. This agreement between invasive localization of cortical tissue and MEG recordings shows the effectiveness of MEG analysis and indicates that MEG may substitute invasive procedures in the future.

Fetal

MEG has been used to study cognitive processes such as vision, audition, and language processing in fetuses and newborns.[33] Only two bespoke MEG systems, designed specifically for fetal recordings, operate worldwide.[34] The first was installed at the University of Arkansas in 2000, and the second was installed at the University of Tübingen in 2008. Both devices are referred to as SQUID arrays for reproductive assessment (SARA) and utilize a concave sensor array whose shape compliments the abdomen of a pregnant woman. Fetal recordings of cortical activity are feasible with a SARA device from a gestational age of approximately 25 weeks onward until birth. Although built for fetal recordings, SARA systems can also record from infants placed in a cradle head-first toward the sensory array.[34] A third high density custom-made unit with similar whole abdomen coverage has been installed in 2002 at the University of Kansas Medical Center to assess fetal electrophysiology.[35][36] While only a small number of devices worldwide are capable of fetal MEG recordings as of 2023, the proliferation of optically pumped magnetometers for MEG in neuroscience research[37] will likely result in a greater number of research centers capable of recording and publishing fetal MEG data in the near future.[34]

Traumatic brain injury

MEG can be used to identify traumatic brain injury, which is particularly common among soldiers exposed to explosions. Such injuries are not easily diagnosed by other methods, as the symptoms (e.g. sleep disturbances, memory problems) overlap with those from frequent co-morbidities such as post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD).[23]

Comparison with related techniques

MEG has been in development since the 1960s but has been greatly aided by recent advances in computing algorithms and hardware, and promises improved spatial resolution coupled with extremely high temporal resolution (better than 1 ms). Since the MEG signal is a direct measure of neuronal activity, its temporal resolution is comparable with that of intracranial electrodes.

MEG complements other brain activity measurement techniques such as electroencephalography (EEG), positron emission tomography (PET), and fMRI. Its strengths consist in independence of head geometry compared to EEG (unless ferromagnetic implants are present), non-invasiveness, use of no ionizing radiation, as opposed to PET and high temporal resolution as opposed to fMRI.

MEG in comparison to EEG

Although EEG and MEG signals originate from the same neurophysiological processes, there are important differences.[38] Magnetic fields are less distorted than electric fields by the skull and scalp, which results in a better spatial resolution of the MEG. Whereas scalp EEG is sensitive to both tangential and radial components of a current source in a spherical volume conductor, MEG detects only its tangential components. Scalp EEG can, therefore, detect activity both in the sulci and at the top of the cortical gyri, whereas MEG is most sensitive to activity originating in sulci. EEG is, therefore, sensitive to activity in more brain areas, but activity that is visible in MEG can also be localized with more accuracy.

Scalp EEG is sensitive to extracellular volume currents produced by postsynaptic potentials. MEG detects intracellular currents associated primarily with these synaptic potentials because the field components generated by volume currents tend to cancel out in a spherical volume conductor.[39] The decay of magnetic fields as a function of distance is more pronounced than for electric fields. Therefore, MEG is more sensitive to superficial cortical activity, which makes it useful for the study of neocortical epilepsy. Finally, MEG is reference-free, while scalp EEG relies on a reference that, when active, makes interpretation of the data difficult.

Abstract

Decoding speech from brain activity is a long-awaited goal in both healthcare and neuroscience. Invasive devices have recently led to major milestones in this regard: deep-learning algorithms trained on intracranial recordings can now start to decode elementary linguistic features such as letters, words and audio-spectrograms. However, extending this approach to natural speech and non-invasive brain recordings remains a major challenge. Here we introduce a model trained with contrastive learning to decode self-supervised representations of perceived speech from the non-invasive recordings of a large cohort of healthy individuals. To evaluate this approach, we curate and integrate four public datasets, encompassing 175 volunteers recorded with magneto-encephalography or electro-encephalography while they listened to short stories and isolated sentences. The results show that our model can identify, from 3 seconds of magneto-encephalography signals, the corresponding speech segment with up to 41% accuracy out of more than 1,000 distinct possibilities on average across participants, and with up to 80% in the best participants—a performance that allows the decoding of words and phrases absent from the training set. The comparison of our model with a variety of baselines highlights the importance of a contrastive objective, pretrained representations of speech and a common convolutional architecture simultaneously trained across multiple participants. Finally, the analysis of the decoder's predictions suggests that they primarily depend on lexical and contextual semantic representations. Overall, this effective decoding of perceived speech from non-invasive recordings delineates a promising path to decode language from brain activity, without putting patients at risk of brain surgery.

Main

Every year, traumatic brain injuries, strokes and neurodegenerative diseases cause thousands of patients lose their ability to speak or even communicate^{1,2,3,4,5,6}. Brain–computer interfaces (BCIs) have raised high expectations for the detection^{4,5,7,8} and restoration of communication abilities in such patients^{9,10,11,12,13,14}. Over recent decades, several teams have used BCIs to efficiently decode phonemes, speech sounds^{15,16}, hand gestures^{11,12} and articulatory movements^{13,17} from electrodes implanted in the cortex or over its surface. For instance, Willett et al. ¹² decoded 90 characters per minute (with a 94% accuracy, that is, roughly 15–18 words per minute) from a patient with a spinal-cord injury, recorded in the motor cortex during 10 hours of writing sessions. Similarly, Moses et al. ¹³ decoded 15.2 words per minute (with 74.4% accuracy, and using a vocabulary of 50 words) in a patient with anarthria and a BCI implanted in the sensori-motor cortex, recorded over 48 sessions spanning over 22 hours. Finally, Metzger et al. ¹⁸ recently showed that a patient with severe limb and vocal-tract paralysis and a BCI implanted in the sensori-motor cortex could efficiently spell words using a code word that represented each English letter (for example, ‘alpha’ for ‘a’): this approach leads to a character error rate of 6.13% and a speed of 29.4 characters per minute, and hence starts to provide a viable communication channel for such patients.

However, such invasive recordings face a major practical challenge: these high-quality signals require brain surgery and can be difficult to maintain chronically. Several laboratories have thus focused on decoding language from non-invasive recordings of brain activity such as magneto-encephalography (MEG) and electro-encephalography (EEG). MEG and EEG are sensitive to macroscopic changes of electric and magnetic signals elicited in the cortex, and can be acquired with a safe and potentially wearable set-up¹⁹. However, these two devices produce notoriously noisy signals that vary greatly across sessions and across individuals^{20,21,22}. It is thus common to engineer pipelines that output hand-crafted features, which, in turn, can be learned by a decoder trained on a single participant^{23,24,25,26,27,28}.

In sum, decoding language from brain activity is, so far, limited either to invasive recordings or to impractical tasks. Interestingly, both of these approaches tend to follow a similar method: that is, (1) training a model on a single participant and (2) aiming to decode a limited set of interpretable features (Mel spectrogram, letters, phonemes, small set of words).

Instead, here we propose to decode speech from non-invasive brain recordings by using (1) a single architecture trained across a large cohort of participants and (2) deep representations of speech learned with self-supervised learning on a large quantity of speech data. We focus the present work on speech perception in healthy volunteers rather than speech production in patients to design a deep-learning architecture that effectively addresses two core challenges: (1) the fact that non-invasive brain recording can be extremely noisy and variable across trials and across participants and (2) the fact that the nature and format of language representations in the brain remain largely unknown. For this, we introduce a ‘brain module’ and train it with contrastive learning to align its representations to those of a pretrained ‘speech module’, namely, wav2vec 2.0 (ref. 29) (Fig. 1). We train a single model for all participants, sharing most of the weights except for one participant-specific layer. Figure 1 provides a broad overview of our approach.

We aim to decode speech from the brain activity of healthy participants recorded with MEG or EEG while they listen to stories and/or sentences. For this, our model extracts the deep contextual representations of 3 s speech signals (Y of F feature by T time samples) from a pretrained ‘speech module’ (wav2vec 2.0: ref. 29) and learns the representations (Z) of the brain activity on the corresponding 3 s window (X of C recording channels by T time samples) that maximally align with these speech representations with a contrastive loss (CLIP: ref. 44). The representation Z is given by a deep convolutional network. At evaluation, we input the model with left-out sentences and compute the probability of each 3 s speech segment given each brain representation. The resulting decoding can thus be ‘zero shot’ in that the audio snippets predicted by the model need not be present in the training set. This approach is thus more general than standard classification approaches where the decoder can only predict the categories learnt during training.

Full size image

To validate our approach, we curate and integrate four public MEG and EEG datasets, encompassing the brain activity of 175 participants passively listening to sentences of short stories (see Table 1 for details). For each MEG and EEG recording, we evaluate our model on its ability to accurately identify the corresponding audio segment from a large set of more than 1,500 segments (that is, ‘zero shot’ decoding).

Table 1 Datasets

Full size table

This study provides three main contributions for the development of a non-invasive method to decode speech from brain activity. First, it shows how pretrained speech models can leverage the decoding of speech in the brain, without exposing volunteers to a tedious repetition of every single word targeted by the decoder. Second, it shows how specific design choices—including contrastive learning and our multi-participant architecture—improve the processing of continuous EEG and MEG recordings. Finally, our results suggest that the speech decoder is primarily based on high-level and semantic representations of speech.

Results

Accurately decoding speech from MEG and EEG recordings

Our model predicts the correct segment, out of more than 1,000 possibilities, with a top-10 accuracy up to 70.7% on average across MEG participants (Table 2, top-1 accuracy up to 41.3%, and Extended Data Fig. 1). For more than half of the samples, the true audio segment is ranked first or second in the decoders' predictions. Interestingly, these performances can reach high top-1 accuracy in the best performing participants: for example, above 80% top-1 accuracy in the best participant of the Gwilliams 2022 dataset³⁰ (Fig. 2a). For comparison, a model that predicts a uniform distribution over the vocabulary ('random model') only achieves less than 1% top-10 accuracy on the same MEG datasets. Decoding performance for EEG datasets is substantially lower: our model reaches 17.7% and 25.7% top-10 accuracy for the two EEG datasets currently analysed. While modest, these scores are much higher than the random baseline.

Is MEG really much better than EEG?

To investigate whether these performances depend on the total recording duration and/or the number of recording sensors, we train our model on a subset of the data that homogenizes recording time, the number of sensors and the number of participants. For this, we discard the dataset of Brennan and Hale³¹, to avoid over-limiting the analysis dataset. Consequently, we match all datasets to the smallest number of channels of the three remaining datasets by keeping a random but fixed subset of channels (for example, 128). We keep only 19 participants per dataset, again aligning on the smallest for all three datasets. Finally, we keep the same average duration per participant for all three datasets, by dropping out some training segments (that is, the same segments are dropped for all participants or repetitions within one participant). All test segments are kept to maximize reliability. Overall, this subsampling diminishes decoding performance (for example, top 10: 30.3% for the Schoffelen dataset³² and 31.7% for the Gwilliams dataset³³), but MEG decoding remains much better than the EEG (Mann–Whitney across MEG and EEG participants: all $P < 10^{-6}$). Although these results should be confirmed by presenting the same stimuli to participants recorded with both EEG and MEG, they suggest that the difference in decoding performance observed between studies is mainly driven by the type of device.

‘Speech module’ evaluation

To evaluate our approach, we compare these decoding performances to those obtained with models that target different representations of speech (Table 2). While a model trained to predict the Mel spectrogram with a regression objective (‘Base model’ in Table 2) is systematically higher than chance, the use of a contrastive loss (‘+ Contrastive’) leads to decoding gains that range from 2% (for the Brennan and Hale dataset³¹) to 42.7% (for the Gwilliams dataset³³). This gain is further supplemented by targeting the latent representations of the Mel spectrogram (‘+ Deep Mel’). The latent representations of speech sounds, however, appear to be best identified with a pretrained speech module, that is, by using wav2vec 2.0, a model pretrained with self-supervised learning on speech sounds only, rather than by jointly learning speech and MEG and EEG representations (Table 2). Overall, these results show the importance, for decoding, of targeting deep representations of speech.

‘Brain module’ evaluation

To evaluate the elements of the brain module, we performed a series of ablation experiments, and trained the corresponding models on the same data (Extended Data Fig. 2). Overall, these ablations show that several elements impact performance: performance systematically decreases when removing skip connections, the spatial attention module, and the initial or final convolutional layers of the brain module. These results also show the importance of clamping the MEG and EEG signals. Finally, additional experiments show that the present end-to-end architecture is robust to MEG and EEG artefacts, and requires little preprocessing of the MEG and EEG signals (Supplementary Sections A.3 and A.4).

Impact of the number of participants

To test whether our model effectively leverages the inter-individual variability, we trained it on a variable number of participants and computed its accuracy on the first 10% of participants. As shown in Fig. 2c, decoding performance steadily increases as the model is trained with more participants on the two MEG datasets. This result shows that our model effectively learns neural representations that are common across participants, while also accommodating participant-specific representations through the participant layer described in Methods.

Decoded representations best correlate with phrase embeddings

What type of representation does our model use to decode speech from brain signals? This interpretability question is notoriously difficult to address^{22,34}. Figure 3 illustrates this issue: it shows the probability of each word given the MEG data of five representative participants listening to the phrase ‘Thank you for coming, Ed’. Extended Data Fig. 3 shows additional predictions for five representative segments of the Gwilliams dataset 33. In both cases, it can be difficult to judge whether the decoder’s error tends to be related to the phonology or to the semantics of the actual sentence.

Word-level predictions for five representative participants (between the 20% (top) and the 80% percentiles (bottom) of the cohort) of the Gwilliams dataset³³ while they listened to the sentence ‘Thank you for coming, Ed’. Blue words correspond to the correct word and black words correspond to negative candidates. Text size is proportional to the log-probability output by our model.

Full size image

To address this issue, we analyse the single-word and single-segment predictions of our model with a linear model.

Specifically, we train a linear regression to predict the softmax probability of the true word estimated by the decoder, given different set of features, ranging from low-level representations (for example, phonemes) to high-level representations (for example, phrase embedding; see Methods for details). The results, shown in Fig. 4, show that the part-of-speech ($P < 0.004$), word embedding ($P < 10^{-8}$), bag-of-words embedding ($P < 10^{-23}$) and phrase embedding ($P < 10^{-23}$) significantly predict the single-trial decoding predictions. Overall, the higher level the representation, the more it accounts for the decoder’s predictions. Given that phrase embeddings are known to capture semantic and syntactic representations^{35,36,37}, these results suggest that our decoder primarily relies on high-level and semantic representations of speech.

Fig. 4: Decoding predictions mainly rely on high-level semantic features.

The R values quantify the extent to which phonemes, word frequency, part-of-speech, word embedding and phrase embedding predict the probability of the predicted word to be correct. Error bars are the s.e.m. across participants (Table 1).

Methods

We formalize the general task of neural decoding and then describe and motivate the different components of our model, before describing the datasets, preprocessing, training and evaluation.

Problem formalization

We aim to decode speech from a time series of high-dimensional brain signals recorded with non-invasive MEG or EEG while healthy volunteers passively listened to spoken sentences in their native language. How spoken words are represented in the brain is largely unknown^{37,38,39}. Thus, it is common to train decoders in a supervised manner to predict a latent representation of speech known to be relevant to the brain^{16,34,40,41,42}. For example, the Mel spectrogram is often targeted for neural decoding because it represents sounds similar to the cochlea⁴³. We formalize this problem as follows. Let $(X \in \{\mathbb{R}\}^{C \times T})$ be a segment of a brain recording of a given participant while she listens to a speech segment of the same duration, with C the number of MEG or EEG sensors and T the number of time steps. Let $(Y \in \{\mathbb{R}\}^{F \times T})$ be the latent representation of speech, using the same sample rate as X for simplicity, here the Mel spectrogram with F frequency bands. In this formalization, supervised decoding consists of finding a decoding function: $\{\mathbf{f}\}_{\mathbf{r}}: \mathbb{R}^{C \times T} \rightarrow \mathbb{R}^{F \times T}$ such that $\mathbf{f}$ predicts Y given X . We denote by $\hat{Y} = \{\mathbf{f}\}_{\mathbf{r}}(X)$ the representation of speech decoded from the brain. When $\mathbf{f}$ belongs to a parameterized family of models like deep neural networks, it can be trained with a regression loss $\mathcal{L}_{\mathbf{r}}(Y, \hat{Y})$ (for example, the mean square error)

This direct regression approach appears to be dominated by a non-distinguishable broadband component when speech is present (Extended Data Fig. 4a,b). This challenge motivates our three main contributions: the introduction of a contrastive loss, a pretrained deep speech representation and a dedicated brain decoder.

Model

Contrastive loss

We reasoned that regression may be an ineffective loss because it departs from our objective—that is, it requires maximally distinguishing different speech segments apart. Indeed, a regression objective stems from the principle that all of the dimensions of the Mel spectrogram are (1) equally important and (2) are scaled appropriately: the L2 objective inclines the model to predict low and high frequencies equally well, even if (1) some frequencies (for example, very low) may be irrelevant to speech and (2) some frequencies may vary in orders of magnitudes lower than others. To relax this constraint, we opted for a contrastive objective and thus replaced the regression loss with the ‘CLIP’ loss (originally for Contrastive Language-Image Pre-Training) by ref. 44, which was originally designed to match latent representations in two modalities, text and images. Unlike the regression objective, this contrastive loss leads the model to find a combination of features that maximally discriminates samples in the batch.

Consequently, the model is naturally inclined to focus on the informative dimensions of the Mel spectrograms and to scale them appropriately. We implement the CLIP loss as follows. Let X be a brain recording segment and $(Y \in \mathbb{R}^{F \times T})$ the latent representation of its corresponding sound (also known as ‘positive sample’). We sample $N - 1$ negative samples $\{\bar{Y}_j \in \{1, \dots, N-1\}\}$ over our dataset and we add the positive sample as $\{\bar{Y}_N = Y\}$. We want our model to predict the probabilities $(\forall j \in \{1, \dots, N\}, p_j = \mathbb{P}[\bar{Y}_j = Y])$. We thus train a model f_{clip} mapping the brain activity X to a latent representation $Z = \{\mathbf{f}\}_{\text{clip}}(X) \in \mathbb{R}^{F \times T}$. The estimated probability can then be approximated by the dot product of Z and the candidate speech latent representations Y_j , followed by a softmax:

$$\hat{p}_j = \frac{\exp(\langle Z, \bar{Y}_j \rangle)}{\sum_{j'} \exp(\langle Z, \bar{Y}_{j'} \rangle)} \quad (2)$$

with $\langle \cdot, \cdot \rangle$ the inner product over both dimensions of Z and $\hat{Y}$. We then train fclip with a cross-entropy between p_j and $\hat{p}_j$. Note that for a large enough dataset, we can neglect the probability of sampling twice the same segment, so that we have $\{p_j\}_{j=1}^N = \{\mathbb{1}\}_{j=1}^N$, and the cross-entropy simplifies to

Following ref. 44, we use the other elements of the batch as negative samples at train time. At test time, the negative samples correspond to all of the segments of the test set but the positive one.

Brain module

For the brain module, we introduce a deep neural network fclip, input with raw MEG and EEG times series X and a one-hot encoding of the corresponding participant s , and outputs the latent brain representation Z , with the same sample rate as X . This architecture consists of (1) a spatial attention layer over the MEG and EEG sensors followed (2) by a participant-specific 1×1 convolution designed to leverage inter-individual variability, which input to (3) a stack of convolutional blocks. An overview of the model is given in the Extended Data Fig. 4e. In the following, given a tensor U , we note $U(i, \dots)$ access to specific entries in the tensor.

Spatial attention

The brain data are first remapped onto $D1 = 270$ channels with a spatial attention layer based on the location of the sensors. The three-dimensional sensor locations are first projected on a two-dimensional plane obtained with the MNE-Python function `find_layout45`, which uses a device-dependent surface designed to preserve the channel distances. Their two-dimensional positions are finally normalized to $[0, 1]$. For each output channel, a function over $[0, 1]^2$ is learnt, parameterized in the Fourier space. The weights over the input sensors are then given by the softmax of the function evaluated at the sensor locations. Formally, each input channel i has a location (x_i, y_i) and each output channel j is attached a function a_j over $[0, 1]^2$ parameterized in the Fourier space as $\{z_j\}_{k,l \in \{1, \dots, K\}} \in \mathbb{C}^{K \times K}$ with $K = 32$ harmonics along each axis, that is

The output is given by a softmax attention based on the evaluation of a_j at each input position (x_i, y_i) :

$$\forall j \in \{1, \dots, D_1\}, \{ \text{SA} \} (X)^{(j)} = \frac{1}{\sum_{i=1}^C e^{a_j(x_i, y_i)}} \sum_{i=1}^C e^{a_j(x_i, y_i)} X^{(i)} \quad (5)$$ with SA the spatial attention. In practice, as a_j is periodic, we scale down (x, y) to keep a margin of 0.1 on each side. We then apply a spatial dropout by sampling a location (xdrop, ydrop) and removing from the softmax each sensor that is within a distance of $\text{ddrop} = 0.2$ of the sampled location. The initial motivation for spatial attention was to allow for a cross-dataset model to be defined in a way that would generalize across a diverse number location and set of sensors. Interestingly, we observed this layer to introduce an inductive bias that is beneficial to the prediction accuracy (Extended Data Fig. 2). See Extended Data Fig. 4 for a visualization of the learnt attention maps over each dataset. We then add a 1×1 convolution (that is, with a kernel size of 1) without activation and with the same number $D1$ of output channels.

Participant layer

To leverage inter-individual variability, we learn a matrix $\{M_s\}_{s \in [S]} \in \{\mathbb{R}\}^{D_1, D_1}$ for each participant $s \in [S]$ and apply it after the spatial attention layer along the channel dimension. This is similar to but more expressive than the participant embedding used by ref. 46 for MEG encoding, and follows decade of research on participant alignment^{47,48}.

Residual dilated convolutions

We then apply a stack of five blocks of three convolutional layers. For the k th block, the first two convolutions are applied with residual skip connections (except for the very first one where the number of dimension potentially doesn't match), outputs $D2 = 320$ channels and are followed by batch normalization⁴⁹ and a GELU (Gaussian Error Linear Unit) activation⁵⁰. The two convolutions are also dilated to increase their receptive field, by $2^{2k \bmod 5}$ and $2^{2k+1 \bmod 5}$ (with k zero indexed), respectively. The third layer in a block outputs $2D2$ channels and uses a GLU (Gated Linear Unit) activation⁵¹, which halves the number of channels. All convolutions use a kernel size of 3 over the time axis, a stride of 1 and sufficient padding to keep the number of time steps constant across layers. The output of the model is obtained by applying two final 1×1 convolutions: first with $2D2$ outputs, followed by a GELU and finally with F channels as output, thus matching the dimensionality of speech representations. Given the expected delay between a stimulus and its corresponding brain responses, we further shift the input brain signal by 150 ms into the future to facilitate the alignment between Y and Z . The impact of this offset is considered in the Supplementary Section A.5.

Speech module

The Mel spectrogram is a low-level representation of speech inspired from the cochlea and is thus unlikely to match the rich variety of cortical representations³⁸. Consequently, we replaced the Mel spectrograms with latent representations of speech. For this, we propose either to learn these representations end-to-end ('Deep Mel' model) or to rely on those learnt by an independent self-supervised speech model (wav2vec 2.0; ref. 29).

End-to-end speech representations with Deep Mel

The 'Deep Mel' module uses the same deep convolutional architecture to the brain module devoid of the participant block, and thus simultaneously learns to extract speech and MEG and EEG representations such that they are maximally aligned. By definition, and unlike wav2vec 2.0, Deep Mel sees only the audio used in the MEG and EEG datasets. As this end-to-end approach proved to be less efficient than its pretrained counterpart based on wav2vec 2.0, we will thereafter focus on the latter.

Pretrained speech representations with wav2vec 2.0

Wav2vec 2.0 is trained with audio data only to transform the raw waveform with convolutional and transformer blocks to predict masked parts of its own latent representations. A previous study²⁹ showed that the resulting model can be efficiently fine-tuned to achieve state-of-the-art performance in speech recognition. Besides, this model effectively encodes a wide variety of linguistic features^{52,53}. In particular, recent studies have shown that the activations of wav2vec 2.0 linearly map onto those of the brain^{54,55}. Consequently, we here test whether this model effectively helps the present decoding task. In practice, we use the wav2vec2-large-xlsr-53 (ref. 56), which has been pretrained on 56,000 hours of speech from 53 different languages.

Datasets

We test our approach on four public datasets, two based on MEG recordings and two based on EEG recordings. All datasets and their corresponding studies were approved by the relevant ethics committee and are publicly available for fundamental research purposes. Informed consent was obtained from each human research participant. We provide an overview of the main characteristics of the datasets in Table 1, including the number of training and test segments and vocabulary size over both splits. For all datasets, healthy adult volunteers passively listened to speech sounds (accompanied by some memory or comprehension questions to ensure participants were attentive), while their brain activity was recorded with MEG or EEG. In Schoffelen et al.³², Dutch-speaking participants listened to decontextualized Dutch sentences and word lists (Dutch sentences for which the words are randomly shuffled). The study was approved by the local ethics committee (the local Committee on Research Involving Human Subjects in the Arnhem–Nijmegen region). The data are publicly and freely available after registration on the Donders Repository. In Gwilliams et al. ³³, English-speaking participants listened to four fictional stories from the Masc corpus⁵⁷ in two identical sessions of 1 hour³⁰. The study was approved by the institutional review board ethics committee of New York University Abu Dhabi. In Broderick et al. ⁵⁸, English-speaking participants listened to extracts of The Old Man and the Sea. The study was approved by the ethics committees of the School of Psychology at Trinity College Dublin and the Health Sciences Faculty at Trinity College Dublin. In Brennan and Hale³¹, English-speaking participants listened to a chapter of Alice in Wonderland. See Supplementary Section A.1 for more details. The study was approved by the University of Michigan Health Sciences and Behavioral Sciences institutional review board (HUM00081060).

Preprocessing

MEG and EEG are generally considered to capture neural signals from relatively low-frequency ranges²⁰. Consequently, we first resampled all brain recordings down to 120 Hz with Torchaudio⁵⁹ and then split the data into training, validation and testing splits with a size roughly proportional to 70%, 20% and 10%, respectively. We defined a ‘sample’ as a 3 s window of brain recording with its associated speech representation. A ‘segment’ is a unique 3 s window of speech sound. As the same segment can be presented to multiple participants (or even within the same participant in ref. 33), the splits were defined so that one segment is always assigned to the same split across repetitions. We ensured that there were no identical sentences across splits. Furthermore, we excluded all segments overlapping over different splits. For clarity, we restricted the test segments to those that contain a word at a fixed location (here 500 ms before word onset).

MEG and EEG data can suffer from large artefacts, for example, eye movements or variations in the electro-magnetic environment²⁰. To limit their impact, we applied a ‘baseline correction’ (that is, we subtracted from each input channel its average over the first 0.5 s) and a robust scaler with scikit-learn⁶⁰. We normalized the data and clamp values greater than 20 s.d. to minimize the impact of large outlier samples. In Supplementary Section A.3, we study the effect of clamping and show that it is essential to ensure proper training. In Supplementary Section A.4, we further show that this approach is as effective as more complex data-cleaning procedures such as autoreject⁶¹.

For the Mel spectrogram, we used 120 Mel bands (Supplementary Section A.6) (ref. 62), with a normalized STFT (short-time Fourier transform) with a frame size of 512 samples and hop length of 128 samples, using audio sampled at 16 kHz. We applied log-compression, that is, $\log(\epsilon + \text{Mel})$, with $\epsilon = 10^{-5}$. When using wav2vec 2.0, we averaged the activations of the last four layers of its transformer. We used standard normalization for both representations.

Training

One training epoch is defined as 1,200 updates using Adam⁶³ with a learning rate of 3×10^{-4} and a batch size of 256. We stopped training when no improvement was observed on the valid set for ten epochs and kept the best model based on the valid loss. For the direct regression of the Mel spectrogram, we used the MSE (mean square error) loss. We used two V100 graphics processing units with 16 GB of memory. See Supplementary Section A.7 for an analysis of the impact of the training hyperparameters.

Evaluation

Mel reconstructions

In Extended Data Fig. 4, we illustrate some reconstructed Mel spectrograms using different models. With a regression loss, the generation of the Mel spectrogram is made directly. With a CLIP loss, we plot the weighted average across all test segments, where the weight corresponds to the probability of the segment to be true estimated with the CLIP loss. Specifically, given a segment and its matching audio (here the sentence ‘Thank you for coming Ed’), we retrieve the predicted distribution over the 1,363 segments given by equation (2). We then use this distribution to average the Mel spectrogram of each candidate segment.

Segment-level evaluation

The top-10 segment accuracy indicates whether the true segment is in the top-10 most likely segments predicted by the decoder. We favour reporting this metric over the standard top-1 accuracy, given the large number of possible segments as the model may be able to decode useful information, without necessarily guessing the exact speech segment.

Word-level evaluation

To evaluate the model at the word level, we select a 3 s segment for each word of the test set (from -500 ms to 2.5 s). We input the model with the corresponding brain recordings, and output the probability distribution over all test segments. To obtain the distribution over the vocabulary, we group the candidate segments by the corresponding word (that is, starting at $t = 0$) and sum the probabilities of the same words spoken in different segments. Top-1 and top-10 word-level accuracy then quantify whether the true word is within the first or first 10 most likely predictions of the model, respectively.

Prediction analysis

To further inspect the predictions of the decoder, we quantify the extent to which they can be predicted from well-defined features $\{\tilde{Y} \in \{R\}^{n \times \{f\}_i}\}$. For this, we extract the phonetic features ($d = 60$) with Phonemizer64, the 'zipf' frequency ($d = 1$) with Wordfreq65, the part-of-speech tags ($d = 15$), the word embedding ($d = 300$) of each word with spaCy66 as well as the phrase embedding of the corresponding 3 s speech segment ($d = 1,024$) with Laser67. We refer to 'bag-of-words' as the sum of word embeddings over the segment. We then train a ridge regression with scikit-learn's default parameters60 to predict the softmax probability of the true word output by the decoder, and estimate, with a five-split cross-validation, the correspondence between these two values with Pearson's R correlation. In sum, this analysis quantifies how well the feature predicts the probability of being selected by the decoder.

Statistics

Statistical comparison was performed on the test set. We used a Wilcoxon test across participants to compare different models on the same datasets. We used a Mann–Whitney test across participants to compare different datasets.

Discussion

Our model accurately identifies, from three seconds of non-invasive recordings of brain activity, the corresponding speech segment with up to 41% accuracy out of more than 1,000 distinct possibilities. This performance, sometimes reaching 80% in the best participants, allows the decoding of perceived words and phrases that are absent from the training set.

To decode speech perception from MEG and EEG, two major challenges must be overcome. First, these signals can be very noisy, making it difficult to extract useful information. Second, it is unclear which features of speech are, in fact, represented in the brain. Here we discuss how our 'brain' and 'speech' modules respectively address these two issues in the case of speech perception. Finally, we evaluate the performance of our model compared with previous works and outline the necessary steps to be taken before hoping to deploy this approach for the decoding of speech production in clinical settings.

Efficiently extracting brain signals

Non-invasive recordings are notoriously noisy: these signals present large variations across trials and participants and they are often contaminated by large artefacts^{20,21,22}. Historically, solving this problem has involved complex preprocessing pipelines that include a variety of techniques—independent component analysis, outlier detection, artefact correction—that end with a linear model specific to each participant^{68,69,70}. More recently, several deep-learning architectures have proved successful in solving simple classification tasks trained on single-participant recordings^{71,72}.

Building on these efforts, our end-to-end architecture requires minimal preprocessing of MEG and EEG signals and can be trained with a variety of participants, devices and stimuli. As decoding speech production can be challenged by the presence of muscular activity, we here evaluate this model on four public datasets where healthy participants listened to natural speech. Our analyses suggest that advanced MEG and EEG preprocessing does not provide a major advantage in the current decoding task and that a simple baseline correction followed by a robust scaler and clamping suffices. In addition, not only does our participant-specific layer improves decoding performance but also this performance increases with the number of participants present in the training set. These findings, combined with both the rise of publicly available datasets and the potential to learn informative features from unannotated data^{73,74}, suggest that this brain module may be a stepping stone for building a foundational model of brain recordings.

How is language represented in the brain?

Separating noise and signal in brain recordings is not, however, the only challenge. The nature of these representations in terms of their acoustic, phonetic, lexical and semantic properties remains poorly known. Consequently, determining the representations most suitable for decoding is an unresolved problem. To tackle this issue, previous studies have primarily used supervised models targeting well-defined features of language, such as individual letters, phonemes or frequency bands of the audio spectrogram^{12,23,24,72,75,76,77,78,79,80}. Although this approach has demonstrated clear successes, it may impede the speed at which words are decoded from brain activity: for instance, spelling out a word letter by letter could be a slow and laborious process. As an alternative, others have proposed to learn to classify a small set of words^{26,28,81,82,83}. This approach, however, is difficult to scale to a vocabulary size adequate for natural language. Finally, word semantics may be directly decoded from functional MRI signals^{84,85,86,87,88,89}. However, the corresponding performances currently remain modest at the single-trial level.

Here we show how a neural network pretrained on a large corpus of speech sounds provides representations of language that are particularly valuable for brain decoding. Specifically, we leverage the recent discovery that these self-supervised speech models learn features that linearly relate to those of the brain^{54,55} to build our speech module. By applying contrastive learning, we can effectively identify the most appropriate features for identifying new speech segments. Our analyses confirm that this approach outperforms (1) a supervised decoding of the Mel spectrogram as well as (2) 'Deep Mel', that is, latent representations of the Mel spectrogram optimized for decoding solely from the present MEG and EEG datasets. Finally, the inspection of the decoding predictions suggests that our model primarily captures the lexical and contextual features captured by modern word embeddings and language models. So far, however, what these high-level features represent and how these representations are structured and manipulated remain to be determined.

Comparison with previous works

Comparing the performance of our model to previous works is difficult because the variety of experimental paradigms is not compensated by a profusion of open datasets and reproducible code. Two elements may, nonetheless, substantiate such a comparison.

First, the size of vocabulary currently considered exceeds previous attempts, often by several orders of magnitude. For example, MEG and EEG studies typically used supervised decoders to discriminate a very small set of words^{26,28,81,82,83} or sublexical classes (for example, phonemes, syllables, tones)^{23,24,77,78,79,80}. For example, several studies^{90,91,92} developed a decoder to classify 11, 5 and 2 distinct imagined phonemes from EEG signals, respectively. Similarly, several studies^{25,26,27} developed an MEG decoder to classify 6 distinct part-of-speech (with 48% accuracy), 10 words (83% accuracy) and 3 words (70% accuracy), respectively. The limited vocabulary used in these non-invasive studies contrast with the present approach, which demonstrably accurately distinguishes several hundreds of words. Furthermore, the performances of our model are based on vocabularies that do not fully overlap with those used in the training set (Table 1). For example, for the Gwilliams dataset, the decoding performance reaches 40% in spite of the fact that nearly 36% of the words were never presented during training. Overall, such zero-shot decoding shows the versatility of this approach and opens the possibility to decode from even larger vocabulary.

Second, although our model's performance remains modest, it may not be too distant from the performance obtained with invasive recordings of brain activity. Indeed, decoding the perception of isolated words from a vocabulary of $n = 50$ words leads to a top-1 accuracy of 22.7% on average, but up to 42.9% in the best participants (Supplementary Section A.9). In comparison, Moses et al. 13 reported decoding produced words from intracranial recordings with a top-1 accuracy of 39.5% for isolated words out of $n = 50$ words. Similarly, still restricting the number of candidates to 50 and, this time, within the context of a sentence, our model decoding is above 72.5% top-1 accuracy on average across participants, and the best participants reach between 92.2% (ref. 32) and 95.9% (ref. 30; Fig. 2b), where Moses et al. 13 reached a top-1 accuracy of 74%. While comparing the decoding of perceived versus produced words should be considered with caution given their different brain bases, the performance of the current model thus leads us to be optimistic about its potential applicability in a speech production context.

Remaining steps to decode speech production in the clinics

Our non-invasive approach focuses on speech perception. To reach the performance obtained with clinical recordings^{10,12,13,18,40,93,94,95}, decoding intended communication will thus require addressing several challenges. Three specific challenges stand out.

First, the current model needs to be adapted to speech production. This can, in principle, be achieved by replacing the speech module with a neural network pretrained on production tasks such as handwriting or speech production.

Second, the current contrastive-learning objective can identify only the most likely word or speech segment from a predetermined set. The model thus needs to be supplemented with a generative module that can estimate the most likely phoneme, word or sentence given brain activity without requiring this set of candidates, similarly to what is being achieved with functional MRI^{89,96}.

Finally, our study reveals striking differences between EEG and MEG. While EEG is known to be less precise than MEG, we did not expect such an important difference in decoding performance. Adapting current MEG systems to the clinics will require substantial efforts, however: while new room-temperature sensors already show signal-to-noise ratio comparable to the superconducting quantum interference devices (SQUIDs) used in the present study, these systems are not commonly deployed in clinical settings, whose magnetic environment can be extremely noisy. Combined with artificial intelligence systems, these new devices could nevertheless contribute to improve the diagnosis, prognosis and restoration of language processing in non-communicating or poorly communicating patients without putting them at risk of brain surgery. In that regard, we hope that the release of a reproducible pipeline will contribute to the development of safe and scalable non-invasive methods for decoding intended communication.

Contributions

The project was led by A.D. and J.-R.K. J.-R.K. took care of the data curation. The training pipeline was built by J.R., O.K. and A.D. O.K. and A.D. handled model training and hyperparameter search. The speech module and evaluation pipeline was built by C.C. A.D., C.C., O.K. and J.-R.K. provided in depth data and results analysis. The present paper was written by A.D., C.C. and J.-R.K.

Extended data

Extended Data Fig. 1 Top-1 Accuracy.

Segment-level top-1 accuracy related to Table 2.

Extended Data Fig. 2 Ablations of the brain module.

Segment-level top-10 accuracy (%) for our model and its ablated versions. Stars indicate significant gain ($p < 0.001$) across participants (dataset dependent, see Table 1). Confidence intervals are SEM over 3 runs.

Extended Data Fig. 3 Word-level predictions for different sentences.

Similar illustration to Fig. 3 in the main paper but for five representative speech segments. The top and bottom segments are the easiest and hardest to decode, respectively. For each segment, we plot the predictions obtained for the subject with the median decoding scores across the cohort.

Extended Data Fig. 4 Design choices and brain module.

Design choices. A. Illustration of a 3 s speech sound segment (bottom) and its corresponding Mel spectrogram (top). B. Mel-spectrogram predicted with a direct regression loss of a brain decoder (orange). C. Replacing the regression loss with a contrastive loss improves reconstruction in the same subject, still using the mel-spectrogram as the speech representation. D. Now replacing the mel-spectrogram with wav2vec 2.0. The probabilities given by Eq. (2) are used to rebuild a mel-spectrogram. E. Architecture of the brain module. Architecture used to process the brain recordings. For each layer, we note first the number of output channels, while the number of time steps is constant throughout the layers. The model is composed of a spatial attention layer, then a 1x1 convolution without activation. A 'Subject Layer' is selected based on the subject index s , which consists in a 1x1 convolution learnt only for that subject with no activation. Then, we apply five convolutional blocks made of three convolutions. The first two use residual skip connection and increasing dilation, followed by a BatchNorm layer and a GELU activation. The third convolution is not residual, and uses a GLU activation (which halves the number of channels) and no normalization. Finally, we apply two 1x1 convolutions with a GELU in between.

Extended Data Fig. 5 Attention weights.

Red color indicate that the M/EEG sensors is, on average, associated with a higher spatial attention weight. At the exception of the Brennan dataset, the topographies highlight channels typically activated during auditory stimulation.

[15 / 3]The image depicts a fantastical landscape with a central focus on a towering, crystalline structure that emits a radiant blue light. This structure is surrounded by a variety of ruins, including ancient stone structures with pointed arches and towers. The ruins are set against a backdrop of a twilight sky with swirling clouds and a gradient of colors from purple to blue. The overall atmosphere is one of mystery and wonder, with the ruins appearing to be in a state of decay or disrepair. There are no discernible texts or human figures in the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of fantasy art, with a focus on the interplay of light and shadow, and the use of color to create a sense of depth and atmosphere.

Are you familiar with "Division by Zero"? The closer an equation gets to 0, the higher the increase of change becomes, approaching infinity.

In this case, we have a whole bunch of hints that there's another world out there. No evidence, but these constant hints game developers keep dropping out, for instance in the case of Sekiro a Ninja Genichiro in Sekiro's art book, teasing that he might be a ninja in the other side of the story. In the case of bloodborne we see Gherman in the Fishing Hamlet in a magazine scans, things that haven't been found in their respective games. The first answer is "it was cut in development", the real answer is "it's a whole new world".

Just like an equation approaches infinity the closer it gets to division by zero, we're approaching the new world and the evidence just keeps piling up. 38 years of video game hints all leading to this. Have you ever thought of a Secret that lasted this long?

The image displays a simple graphic with a black and white color scheme. At the center of the image, there is a stylized ghost figure with a simple, cartoon-like design. The ghost appears to be in a surprised or startled pose, with its arms raised and its mouth open as if it's shouting or exclaiming. The ghost is depicted with a simple, pixelated style, which gives it a retro or vintage feel.

The background of the image is plain and white, which contrasts with the black and white color of the ghost and text, making them the focal points of the image. The overall style of the image is minimalistic and straightforward, with a focus on the ghost figure and the text. There are no other discernible objects or elements in the image.

$1/0$ is a nonsense expression because, to go back to all of our first division example, you cannot divide one pie among zero participants. One can get metaphysical here but that negates the symbol which the 1 represents and thus the entire problem. The one persists and you have to deal with it.

[15 / 3]The image depicts a fantastical landscape with a central focus on a towering, crystalline structure that emits a radiant blue light. This structure is surrounded by a variety of ruins, including ancient stone structures with pointed arches and towers. The ruins are set against a backdrop of a twilight sky with swirling clouds and a gradient of colors from purple to blue. The overall atmosphere is one of mystery and wonder, with the ruins appearing to be in a state of decay or disrepair. There are no discernible texts or human figures in the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of fantasy art, with a focus on the interplay of light and shadow, and the use of color to create a sense of depth and atmosphere.

Are you familiar with "Division by Zero"? The closer an equation gets to 0, the higher the increase of change becomes, approaching infinity.

In this case, we have a whole bunch of hints that there's another world out there. No evidence, but these constant hints game developers keep dropping out, for instance in the case of Sekiro a Ninja Genichiro in Sekiro's art book, teasing that he might be a ninja in the other side of the story. In the case of bloodborne we see Gherman in the Fishing Hamlet in a magazine scans, things that haven't been found in their respective games. The first answer is "it was cut in development", the real answer is "it's a whole new world".

Just like an equation approaches infinity the closer it gets to division by zero, we're approaching the new world and the evidence just keeps piling up. 38 years of video game hints all leading to this. Have you ever thought of a Secret that lasted this long?

of purple at the bottom. The title of the book is prominently displayed in white capital letters at the center of the cover. Below the title, the author's name is written in smaller white capital letters. The publisher's logo, which is a small black square with a white "R" inside it, is located at the bottom right corner of the cover. The overall style of the image is simple and professional, with a focus on the title and author's name.

I think the main thing I really walked away with was the separation of the subject from the ego. We are not most of the things we think we are. We just pick a subset of the symbolic order and we decide to call it "ourselves". We thus fall for two fallacies at once: We are wrong in thinking that our position in the symbolic order is fixed and immutable. We are also wrong in thinking that the symbolic order itself is fixed and immutable.

I think I grasp the main idea but the full implications are not clear to me yet. I feel like if I ruminate on it enough it will become clear and very liberating. Then I'll be ready for Deleuze and Guattari. I still don't get the weird algebraic stuff.

be in a dynamic pose, with one arm raised and the other extended forward. The figure is set against a backdrop that includes a circular frame with a border, which is black and white.

At the bottom of the cover, in smaller red letters, the text "à l'évidence et le médium judéo-Christian" is written. This text is also in a serif font and is smaller than the title.

The bottom of the cover has a small black and white illustration of a book spine, which is not fully visible. The spine is not legible due to the angle and the resolution of the image.

The overall style of the image is a combination of text and illustration, with a focus on the title and the illustration of the figure. The use of red text on a yellow background creates a striking contrast, making the title and the illustration stand out. The black and white illustration adds a historical or mythological element to the cover, suggesting that the book might be about a figure from history or mythology.

GOD spoke to me and revealed to me all and that of all the humans that have worshipped him, I am the only one left, I am the only one who still worships HIM as a result, my MORAL systems and POLITICS are inherently superior to yours. Before I was the only one left GOD admitted that Wim Hof still worshipped him in the right way but GOD felt that Wim Hof did not purely suffer enough and any moment that is not of suffering is contrary to why we are placed on earth: to be punished for the evil acts that we have done.

AND GOD intended that the world be run in an extreme way, one where you would find no rest or shelter and for suffering to be the predominant feeling for your entire life, HE thinks he has failed in this endeavour. HE will start by showing me this new world before, out of nowhere this new world will happen to you.

A world of triumph only through incredible suffering. If you gain from anything, the NEW RELIGION will mock you and ostracize you, and it will be deserved. This is his plan. GODS PLAN is that tomorrow I will climb the mountain Kailash in my boxers alone, and when I succeed, GOD will turn my body into a trillion ravens that will cause a permanent winter to fall upon the earth, and all harvests of plant or animal will fail forevermore. The only surviving crop will be the mushroom. Remember this story, when you see the ravens turn the sky pitch black that I came here to deliver a warning of the next phase in GODS PLAN for the entire world and all its apostates.

When i look at what is going on in the world today, I know all of the mundane reasons for the conflicts, but I cannot help but think there may be an ulterior motive. In FMA one has to sacrifice an entire nation to get a Philosoper's Stone. In other words, carry out a genocide. In "Illuminatus" the Illuminati conspire to cause mass deaths so they can harvest the souls and become immortal. In "John Carter" invisible beings manipulate events to harvest the loosh. Sometimes I get the impression that this sort of thing is what motivates the people really in charge. Not the public figures, the ones in the shadows.

The image is a cartoon-style illustration featuring a character with blonde hair and a surprised expression. The character has a simple, cartoon-like face with large, round eyes and a small mouth. The character is wearing a black shirt with a yellow collar and a black belt with a yellow buckle. The background is a simple, flat color with a hint of a building or structure in the top left corner. The character's hair is styled in a way that it appears to be blowing to the side, adding to the surprised expression. There are no texts or additional elements in the image. Interesting theory, but...

There are crazy money-thirsty billionaires who make a lot of money thanks to wars, and these people form a worldwide mafia that pulls the strings of all the politicians who are nothing more than puppets. THIS is the reason why there are wars.

The philosopher's stone is not an object, it's coded language for when the practitioner has learned the secret of alchemy, turning himself from a non-thinking stone to a "thinking stone", which is the right translation of the original term.

Actually, now that I think about it, while that's chinese, there's a lot of anime that involve harvesting people for some dark purpose.

In FMA the Ishballans clearly represent the Palestinians. It was had to see what was coming at the time the manga was created but still eerily predictive. If you haven't seen "John Carter" it's a really good movie, the 'Therns' are like Archons, most people cannot even see them and they manipulate events for maximum suffering to harvest the loosh. They make themselves known to people in positions of power and give them just what they need to cause death and destruction.

I'm not too familiar with 4chan, sorry if this is the wrong board.

I need wealth. If anyone knows any rituals, "sell your soul" methods that actually work, whatever it is, let me know. I would be willing to die for money. I would be willing to burn in Hell, have any consequences, lose everything in my life as long as I have money.

Please be genuine.

I don't think you actually understand how this kind of deal actually works. You could literally live at my place for free while working yourself up to the ideal you hope to live, and I could consult with you to a large degree. These kind of relationships are not necessarily easy to come by, except for me I just like helping people and want others to succeed.

The kind of thing you are looking for is literally fate crafting, where you sign a deal which involves letting your new fate play out according to the resource network and plans of whatever you sign on with, and in your new life get all the riches or whatever. You have a chance for free right now, payment not required.

It's not particularly important to the holy plan if you have money or not, but these changes we make in you and others will offer occult powers that are useful to others besides just yourself, and they will be useful on many things. Absurdly stupid thing to do. Think about it logically: would you rather:

>Have money for 80 years

Or

>Go to heaven forever after 80 years are done

It's SUCH a no-brainer. Basic economics applies here: no matter your level of time preference, it's still worth your while to keep your soul.

The only reason you're willing to gamble your soul is because you're not sure it exists, speaking honestly here. But surely the prospect of selling it PRESUPPOSES that it exists.

So either:

Soul exists and you have money for 80 years

Soul exists and you go to heaven

Soul doesn't exist and you perform a meaningless ritual and get no money

Soul doesn't exist and you don't bother with the ritual

It's so obvious what the right solution is.

All of the pleasures, and desires, needs, whether money, sex or belonging, we manipulate them to bring individuals and communities better health and performance. Imagine a feeling; no matter how good, it could have been better, yes? Unless it's on that short list of feelings determined by The Almighty to be the best ever. We can seduce the unconscious, subconsciouses and finally consciousnesses of people with these improvements in the pleasures, while making them more calorie efficient, etc.

>Selling your soul for money

Even in belief systems where it's possible, it's a bad idea. You'd be better off selling your body for money. Not that I condone that either.

Honestly, OP, why not just do a simple money spell? Get some green candles, cold chocolates or some shit, write up a petition or a sigil and charge it. It'd be a whole lot less work.

Also, try work.

>I would be willing to die for money >lose everything in my life as long as I have money.

But none of this makes any sense because then you wouldn't be wealthy with money anymore since you would be dead already. You can only own the money if you're actually alive to keep it, so logically speaking, selling your own life for money is money that you won't be receiving anyways because you won't be alive to own it for yourself in reality. I hope you find other things in life to find purpose and meaning in other than just money, because as far as I'm concerned, you've already sold your own soul to money, you just haven't realized it yet. For a board that's highly spiritual, this is a very materialist mindset to have. You need to do some soul searching, anon, and give up this irrational need for high amounts of wealth. If you still want to pursue wealth, then at least do it rationally, morally, and legally. Because this is quite frankly stupid, desperate, and irrational for selling your own soul and life for money you won't be able to own, as if you could actually sell your life and soul for money to begin with. Get a grip on reality, anon, and pursue wealth normally. By owning a legal business like anybody else.

I'm not doing anything technical at all, I'm just saying something basic. OP expresses he'd do anything for wealth, even die in order to obtain it. But that's dumb and irrational, because he'd be dead and own nothing if he tried doing that. Plus there's nothing he can do to obtain physical wealth through paranormal means. I want my mother to have a good life, for my sister to have a good care center or an at-home aid, etc. Most of the money would go to me in an ideal world so I can actually do something that matters in my life but if I died and my folks got a good portion I'd be fine with it. Ideally I'd start a scholarship for folks looking to get into engineering, buy some land in the middle of nowhere, build a house, and never have to see another person again, but that's only if I live. Selling soul is what happens when you have power but use it for lower aims. So you have to develop the power first. Could be spiritual or wordly power. In Faust's case he was a powerful wizard, in the celebrity's case it's their fame. Having no power but a strong desire to sell out is only a start (down the wrong path at that), but not going to get you anywhere

Fair enough. The main reason I want money is for my folks. Ma grew up homeless, I grew up dirt poor. Want to get her a home and let her enjoy things she never did, steak and good fish and such. My sister's so autistic she can't function, so I want her to have a full-time caretaker. I wanted to be an engineer and had the grades for it, but that didn't work out. Want to start a scholarship or something for folks looking to get into engineering-related majors so they don't have to worry about money until they have their degrees. The rest of it would go to me, I'd buy a few acres in the middle of nowhere and live there so I would never have to see another person again, and die with my money. It's not just money for money's sake.

I read the post above, alright I'll tell you. To begin I must explain why this method works. In various spiritual traditions there have been entities who are meant to tempt the seeker into dishonor or evil. This entails presenting the seeker with a dilemma and making them accept a faustian deal out of desperation. In Hermetic Qabalah this is described as the dichotomy between Tiphareth (awakening to the true nature of reality) and Tagiriron (identifying with a false self or selling one's soul). This also means that wealth is the result of the mind, and when one realizes that wealth is the result of mental energy you can begin to manifest it at will. Generally one cannot simply think of money and manifest it instantaneously so the question arises where is the energetic blockage that prevents this? When you realize the true nature of reality you can acquire worldly wealth solely through the power of the mind, so how does one awaken to this truth? This is where I introduce the concept of the Bhavacakra in the link here, I ask of you to

https://ia903409.us.archive.org/33/items/wheel-of-life/WHEEL%20OF%20LIFE_text.pdf

This is the "spiritual matrix" that generates mundane, surface level reality. What the eyes can see, but not what truly IS. The Bhavacakra, the wheel of life. Worldly delights and pleasures exist in this realm, yet this is not true reality, the real world. Notice how often those who sell their soul fall into false identity, false self. And sell their soul because they identify with a time and place that is not the true self. To awaken to the true nature of reality and attain Tiphareth is to know the true self and realize you are a god. When you realize you are a god you will never need to bargain with or pawn wares to any spirit ever again. When you become a god you attain the power of creation and can thus manifest at will. Semantically, a god can be considered one who realizes the true nature of reality.

To use this method and "awaken to the true nature of reality" you must:

1. Study the geometry of the Bhavacakra to the most precise detail, this will allow you to understand how the realm of false reality generates worldly desires and presents us with apparitions and illusions of worldly treasures.

2. If you can find the time try to meditate every day adding 10 minutes every day until you can meditate for one hour, maintain this practice until you are able to enter a trance state at will, adequate instructions for beginning the practice of meditation are enclosed here:

<https://spiritualmeaningsguide.com/the-fundamentals-of-zazen-meditation-a-beginners-guide/>

3. Once you have exactly memorized the geometry of the Bhavacakra or wheel of life and acquired the ability to enter a trance state at will through practice of Zazen, acquire a totem to ground yourself to the physical realm and make sure your soul does not wander during the following working.

4. Enter a trance state, when you are in a state where you can visualize any image in your mind to full visibility imagine yourself traversing the 5 layers and 21 phenomena of the wheel. This may be disturbing or unsettling as these are the phenomena that examine every aspect of our waking existence, make sure to use positive affirmations and thoughts as well as make sure to have utmost belief in yourself. This will keep your spirit and soul centered. When you traverse all the layers and phenomena of the wheel you will exit the wheel and be able to have full control over the wheel of life, you will also be able to enter the world of true reality, Tiphareth, buddhahood, or in this context, godhood. Completing this ritual will bestow you with an elevated state of consciousness where you can directly influence and control systems of worldly growth, extending also to using the power of the mind to generate wealth at will.

Essentially desire is a lower form of gravity and transcending the wheel of life allows one to influence these systems as a form of higher gravity, being able to influence these natural systems being using the enlightened perspective of being able to percieve true reality. This is considered as the power of the gods. Use it wisely and with good intent and good will come to you in abundance.

There are countless ways you can help to sacrifice parts of yourself and others for your pursuit of more money. Make a list of subject matters you wouldn't mind these occult changes pursuing so long as money is among them, health and money, happiness and money, you get the idea. Focus your soul into being as brave as possible so more changes will be possible, I measure the bravery of souls claiming they're ready for radical changes and they aren't always telling the truth. Understand that the psychic powers we put in you may not be totally related to making money, but we may reward you with money-making ability for what you contribute, based on what your nervous system is good at. Understand that a lot of this is like giving up free will; you'll be giving up an old you that you don't want to be any more, the poor one, so you can grasp the new you you want more, to have money.

Whether you're helping by attempting to kill and grow cells every day, or by separating them into categories of "to be killed" and "not to be killed", there's countless ways you can help. You could consider how disruptive these changes are allowed to be to your mind, but your unconscious will consider that if your consciousness does not. Ultimately you get what you put in, if you don't give much, don't expect much in return. Time, thought and physical changes are valuable, the nervous system is like real estate, able to be traded for favors.

Tl;dr Its not a globe and not a flat disk, the ships do not disappear below the horizon, as leading scientists told us for years. They were not held accountable at all, and yet they swore by their claims.

Lets first ask them how much did they hallucinate the ships dropped and did it make them reconsider their belief?

The camera lens is their fucking worst nightmare. Not holding the liars accountable for that until answers are spilled, is a psyop to cover up THE LIE THAT THEY TOLD US ALL. Stop talking about ridiculous theories, stop making all these 'I know it all' theories. The only thing we know is WHATEVER WE ARE LIVING ON, it is SEVERELY DIFFERENT from what they KEEP TELLING US.

There are dozens of impossible experiments that show objects FAR BENEATH the 'horizon' still in full view. And what is the most dominant counter argument? Naaaah, it should not be THAT FAR BELOW THE HORIZON.

1. We need to STOP crafting supposed theories and simply focus on THIS ONE OBSERVABLE FACT.

WE HAVE DISPROVEN THEM.

so let's first, hold them accountable. Hey, mr mrs masonic nigger fuckface scientist, kinda a massive fuck up there? So how FAR BELOW THE HORIZON did you HALLUCINATE THE SHIP TO GO?

Did you imagine it's how far below the horizon exactly? At what distance what drop did you hallucinate and publicly state to be true?

Small steps. Small steps kills the psyop. Just focus on 1 thing they can never do. Just the 1 fuck up of theirs. They cannot disprove it. They show the 24 hour sun to flatearthners who forget the curvature does not exist.

The image depicts a 3D rendering of the Earth's interior, viewed from a perspective that suggests the planet's surface is viewed from the inside out. The Earth's surface is visible in the lower half of the image, with a portion of the continents and oceans visible. The continents are shown in shades of blue and green, with some areas of white and brown, suggesting variations in land and water. The oceans are depicted in a lighter blue, with darker blue areas indicating depth.

In the upper half of the image, there is a dark, curved structure that resembles a tunnel or a passageway. This structure is illuminated by a bright light source, casting a shadow on the Earth's surface. The light source appears to be coming from the top of the structure, creating a contrast with the dark, curved shape.

The image is a digital rendering, and the colors are realistic, with a high level of detail in the Earth's surface and the structure. The style of the image is realistic and appears to be a 3D rendering, likely created using computer graphics software. There are no texts or discernible brands in the image. The overall style of the image is educational and informative, likely intended to convey the complexity and diversity of the Earth's interior.

There is an answer that is quite obvious but also terrifying - for the wrong reasons, mind you. Reptilians are terrified of us - and we nearly drove them to extinction before we even had agriculture. They psychologically manipulate us precisely because we are a barbaric and incredibly dangerous sleeping giant. We use our great intellect for horrifically destructive reasons. Here's a secret: we're smarter than them, they're only ahead of us by the virtue that they had a multi-million year head start - one that we heavily eroded well within a million years.

We are so incredibly dangerous - apex predators that can adapt to virtually any climate, learn incredibly quickly, breed quickly and are surprisingly resilient. They fear us, so they hide and pull strings from the shadows as a defense mechanism.

The image is a collage of six separate photographs, each depicting a different technological advancement or object, with a humorous twist. The text at the top of the image reads "Things that make you go hmm....," suggesting a list of items that might be considered interesting or intriguing.

The fourth photograph shows a sleek, modern fighter jet with a pointed nose and a streamlined body, suggesting the evolution of jet aircraft.

The fifth photograph shows a sleek, modern sports car with a pointed nose and a streamlined body, indicating the evolution of automotive design.

Finally, the sixth photograph shows a man in a suit and glasses, looking surprised or shocked, with the caption "We've lost that technology." This suggests that the image is a commentary on the loss of technological advancements over time.

The photographs are arranged in a grid format, with each photograph occupying its own square, and the text is placed at the top of each square, providing a visual and textual connection between the images. The overall style of the image is humorous and satirical, using a collage format to juxtapose different technological advancements with a humorous twist.

How? Your pic is wrong, because the only way to get the 1060ft figure is to have the eye height of the observer be at 0, which it clearly isn't. But even then the Sears Tower should still be visible since it's 1451 ft high.

The image is a screenshot of a page from a document, specifically a section titled "Equations of Motion." The page is divided into two columns, with the left column containing the text and the right column containing a mathematical equation. The text is in English and discusses the use of general systems of motion in the PHD analysis, specifically focusing on the equations of motion derived from a general system of two coupled, nonlinear differential equations.

The equation on the right column is a mathematical representation of the equations of motion, which are described as "Longitudinal state equations." The equation is a set of two equations, one for the longitudinal and one for the lateral-directional motions of the aircraft. The equations are written in body-axes reference to describe the motion of the aircraft in two-dimensional space.

The text surrounding the equation is in a larger font size and is in a different color, which makes it stand out from the rest of the text. The text is in a serif font, which is commonly used for formal or academic writing. The page number "10" is also visible at the top of the page, indicating that this is the tenth page of the document.

The image is a clear and precise representation of the content, with the text and equation clearly separated, making it easy to read and understand. The use of a larger font for the equations and the different color for the text helps to distinguish the different elements of the document. The page number at the top suggests that this is a part of a larger document or publication.

1. Uh, there is no way a plane could ignore that kind of difference. Imagine a care driving perpendicular to you 50 feet away, trying to hit it with a football and throwing the ball directly at where you see the vehicle and expect it to hit the vehicle. Irrational.
2. But the atmosphere magically perfectly accelerates the plane 200 MPH (in both directions, both with the spin and against it!) such that it just works perfectly every time!
3. Uh, no. The atmosphere high up should not be spinning faster than the ground of Earth (due to increased radius). Hell, gravity pulls down and spin acceleration is perpendicular to gravity, so the force required to accelerate it must be perpendicular to gravity. What is it?
4. This is basic science, but the beast image (propaganda) worshipers cower by blindly believing blatant BS to 'fit in' and feel comfortable with what a Rothschild called 'beautiful lies' (of the cowardly unfit).

Why do you think the atmosphere was ever not spinning?

The Earth's spin came about (for the most part) from the matter coalescing together. When matter goes from a loose formation into a tight formation, angular momentum is conserved and it starts to spin.

The same spin that gave the Earth rotation moved the atmosphere.

There was no point that the air wasn't moving with the rest of Earth, and had to speed up.

Anon, they did a simplification to derive a set of differential equations. We do those all the time in physics and engineering. They specified these are derived under the assumption of a flat and motionless earth so people working with these know the limitations. If you want to go beyond those limitations here is a derivation for a spherical, spinning earth <https://catalogimages.wiley.com/images/db/pdf/0471371459.excerpt.pdf> It vastly simplifies the resulting equations of motion (and one of the reference frames) while introducing little error. Note they also assume a constant mass for the plane, does that mean fuel consumption is fake? Do you even know what those equations are being

Please don't pretend to be knowledgeable about things you know nothing about, it's embarrassing.

If Chevrolet really wanted to they could manufacture the same car and develop the parts for it (its not like they cant be built anymore or their blueprints are lost) its just out of production due to demand.

Plus I think you're underestimating how easy it would be for Chevrolet to bring back that model. As I said, I doubt many of the original parts are still being made by any of the suppliers. "Crimestop means the faculty of stopping short, as though by instinct, at the threshold of any dangerous thought. It includes the power of not grasping analogies, of failing to perceive logical errors, of misunderstanding the simplest arguments if they are inimical to Ingsoc, and of being bored or repelled by any train of thought which is capable of leading in a heretical direction. Crimestop, in short, means protective stupidity.”

“ Most people prefer to believe their leaders are just and fair even in the face of evidence to the contrary, because once a citizen acknowledges that the government under which they live is lying and corrupt, the citizen has to choose what he or she will do about it. To take action in the face of a corrupt government entails risks of harm to life and loved ones. To choose to do nothing is to surrender one's self-image of standing for principles. Most people do not have the courage to face that choice. Hence, most propaganda is not designed to fool the critical thinker but only to give moral cowards an excuse not to think at all.”

The image is a screenshot of a webpage with a black and white photograph of a man in a dark suit and glasses. The man appears to be in his late 70s or early 80s, with a serious expression on his face. The photograph is taken from a side angle, and the man's hands are clasped together in front of him. The background is blurred, suggesting a garden or park setting.

In the upper right corner of the image, there is a red button with the text "LMMO" in white letters. Below the photograph, there is a text box with the title "The Earth?" and a paragraph of text that reads, "The Earth is an sphere and, essentially, a degenerate conception of the Earth's shape or plane or disk. Many recent accretions subscribed to the Earth cosmogony. The model of the Earth is an essential part of the scientific worldview."

The overall style of the image is a combination of a photograph and a text box, with the photograph serving as a visual representation of the text. The text box is larger and bolder than the photograph, drawing attention to the content of the text. The use of a black and white photograph contrasts with the text box, emphasizing the text's importance. The image is likely used for educational or informational purposes, possibly in a science or history context.

“ Universal literacy was supposed to educate the common man to control his environment. Once he could read and write he would have a mind fit to rule. So ran the democratic doctrine. But instead of a mind, universal literacy has given him rubber stamps, rubber stamps inked with advertising slogans, with editorials, with published scientific data, with the trivialities of the tabloids and the platitudes of history, but quite innocent of original thought. Each man's rubber stamps are the duplicates of millions of others, so that when those millions are exposed to the same stimuli, all receive identical imprints. It may seem an exaggeration to say that the American public gets most of its ideas in this wholesale fashion. The mechanism by which ideas are disseminated on a large scale is propaganda, in the broad sense of an organized effort to spread a particular belief or doctrine.”

The irony of all this is that Rothschild said he was not worries about telling the truth because morans were too stoopit to recognize it! Granted, they are sad victim of quiet wars and the cheese in the trap is irresistible for them at this point.

The image displays a stylized, symmetrical design composed of interconnected, interlocking shapes. The shapes are composed of a series of curved lines that form a continuous loop, creating a sense of unity and balance. The lines are black, contrasting sharply with the white background, emphasizing the geometric pattern. The design is symmetrical, with each line and shape mirroring the others, suggesting a theme of symmetry and order. The image is in black and white, which adds a timeless quality to the design. There are no texts or additional elements present in the image. The style of the image is minimalist and abstract, focusing on the interplay of lines and shapes to convey a sense of harmony and balance.

If density always finds its level - that would mean there is no need for any container to make gas pressure, and that would mean there is no problem whatsoever with having a vacuum next to pressurized gas with no barrier at all.

The image is a composite of two separate photographs, both taken at the same location, presumably a lake or a large body of water, with a mountainous backdrop. The top photograph shows a calm, reflective surface with a distant mountain range and a clear sky. The bottom photograph is a close-up of the same water, with a rock visible in the foreground. The text overlay on the image explains that the photo was taken using a camera set at a water level, which gives a globe-earth horizon distance of 0.6 miles. The text also mentions that high-zoom cameras make it easy to see beyond the globe horizon distance.

The image is a collage of various scientific and educational content related to celestial mechanics and energy conservation. At the top, there is a title in bold text that reads "ORBIT EQUATIONS VULNERABLE TO CONSERVATION OF ENERGY." Below the title, there is a screenshot of a computer screen displaying a graph with a red box highlighting a specific data point. The graph shows a relationship between the total energy and the total mass of a celestial body, with the total mass on the x-axis and the total energy on the y-axis.

To the right of the graph, there is a text box with the title "Conservation of Mechanical Energy" and a description that reads, "Equations: Conservation of Mechanical Energy." Below this, there are two equations: " $E = KE + PE$ " and " $E = mgh + KE + PE$."

To the right of the text box, there is a diagram of a celestial body with a caption that reads, "Kepler's equations of orbital motion do not satisfy conservation of energy. To satisfy the conservation of energy, the Keplerian equations must be modified. Kepler sets centripetal force equal to the gravitational force."

Below the celestial body diagram, there is a section titled "Summary of Rössler Formulas" with a table that lists various formulas related to celestial mechanics, such as "Total Energy" and "Energy Conservation."

On the right side of the image, there is a graphic of a celestial body with the text "Kepler's equations of orbital motion do not satisfy conservation of energy. To satisfy the conservation of energy, the Keplerian equations must be modified. Kepler sets centripetal force equal to the gravitational force."

The image also includes a footer with the text "This modified version of the Kepler equations is vulnerable to conservation of energy and space is taken."

The overall style of the image is educational and informative, designed to convey the concept of energy conservation in celestial mechanics.

I'm interested in memes, because like I said I can read back months later and quickly remember the argument.

Videos are great to get ideas, but if the argument is presented simply and clearly, it should be able to fit into a single meme, or 60 second clip, rather than a 40 minute video.

I've got a lot of ideas already written down, and I just need to time to go through them.

An easy example: Calculate the angular resolution of the brightest star. Turns out it shouldn't be visible. Yet it is. Lol.

Another interesting one is that supposedly the gyroscope technology used in everyone's phone is just a little bit too weak to detect the rotation of the earth. So instead it displays white noise when lying still on a table. So if you want to test earth's rotation, you are pay-gated behind the next more precise gyroscope costing like 10,000 dollars.

If you have it: some gyroscope videos maybe. It is a smoking gun proof, but most phone gyroscopes aren't sensitive enough.

Also quite funny how silver bullion is supposed to change weight when flying in an airplane, or taking an elevator of a tall building, or flying from the equator to northern latitudes - and nobody can demonstrate it happening in accordance with Einstein's gravity. Wikipedia doesn't even bother listing those as proofs of gravity.

Moving to the right, there is a section with a black background and a white border. This section contains a series of images, including a close-up of a spacecraft, a close-up of a satellite, and a close-up of a spacecraft with a red and white logo.

Throughout the collage, there are various texts and captions, which provide context and information about the images. The text is mostly in English, with some in a non-Latin script. The style of the image is a collage, with different elements placed together to create a visual narrative.

The flerfer said the slope is deflecting the air, which makes the mass attract TOWARD the mountain.

then they said this would happen even with a vertical face - even though a vertical face would apply no lateral direction to the deflection.

But fine - let's ignore that you seem to not be able to understand pressure like a flerfer. Instead, let me ask you this - if density of the air is what is causing a mass to attract toward a mountain

Would you expect the change in that air density to change how much the mass is attracted?

Can you think of an experiment to determine if this is the case?

Flat Earth is a psyop but not for the reason you think.

It was a psyop to investigate conspiracism, and to compile lists of people who can get invested in the most insane crackpot theories. Secret services want to keep tabs on people/groups like that because the same people tend to get involved in radical politics. And for the same reason they can be manipulated to believe in the Flat Earth, they can be manipulated to become intelligence assets. Tons of Qanon (an obvious psyop) people for example were former flat earthers.

Once it gained followers, the Flat Earth movement was also heavily promoted in media. This was demoralization, it contributed to the general feeling that society is going crazy, people cannot agree on what's true anymore. This further decreases social trust and makes it harder for not-rich and powerful people to organize.

Well no, you could also do it in the open as long as you document the barometric pressure each time. In fact, I would imagine you WANT this, to measure the effect air density has on the observed force.

You could also do it in an enclosure, or even in a space with pressure and density of the surrounding air isolated.

It order to understand earth geometry you need to measure earth

Geo = earth

Metry = measure

Observations about the geometry of earth are not universal and agreed upon (duh no shit) because we get different observations. Thats why you cant really appeal to observation alone, observations change.

Earth geometry doesnt change. Its a description of reality. It will always be measured flat by everyone.

A measurement of earth doesnt require a model either, if you understand the intended uses and purposes of a model

Appreciate the sincere reply. Money is lent into existence. Debt = money. A Federal Reserve Note is like a car note or a mortgage note.

Yes, it is a zero-sum game. It also proves beyond ALL doubt scam artists are in control of it and everything major in society. You lend me $20 at 5% interest and I owe your $21 in a year due to bookkeeping adjustments.

How does $20 pay back $21 unless the Banksters return ALL their interest profits directly back to their borrowers in a timely fashion (they withhold as much as possible — profits!)?

This is a simple math problem, but the engineers won't do it bc the system that validated them and patted them on the head is actually demonic... and they cower from truth.

This is the faulty logic of all the programmed engineers who claim angular momentum explains why a plane can fly from Seattle to San Diego without the pilot accounting for the near 200 MPH spin difference:

1. A car can drive straight from Sea to SD without taking into account the near 200 MPH perpendicular speed difference because the changing angular momentum of the Earth is transferred to the vehicle (through tire contact with Earth).

2. Therefore, the same principle applies to airplanes. STOP THINKING HERE.. too dangerous.

3. What they fail to hear, let alone perceive, is that the angular momentum effect of the atmosphere (perpendicular force) is negligible compared to the angular momentum of effect of Earth pushing on tires.

This is important because we are talking about forces that CHANGE angular momentum of the two vehicles in such a way they can both move directly toward their target moving about 200 MPH faster in a perpendicular direction.

Their claim demands that a relatively negligible atmospheric AM effect yields the exact same effect on a plane than a tire/Earth AM conservation effect.

The answer is correct, but AI was confusing the issue.

Put a quarter on a table and push it with your finger.

Throw the quarter up in the air and blow on it for the same amount of time.

Which transferred force more efficiently?

The answer is obvious.

The Establishment has programmed everything and everybody to assume that objects change perpendicular speed with the Earth's rotation while never proving it.

It is like saying Primordial Soup leads to life... by definition. lol

They hope nobody pays attention to details like that soup has to produce life that can then automatically replicate itself. It has to both create self-replicating life and simultaneously support said life in a safe manner.

Bottom line — the answer is declared and never proved. It is an assumption.

They appear in different sizes.

The point of angular resolution is that there is a smallest size that the human eye can detect, and a light source smaller than that minimum size, the human eye cannot see it - and yet the stars are clearly visible with the naked eye.

Also there is a known distance at which candles can be seen from in the dark. When you apply that same logic to the stars.

There's some much easier experiments to measure gravity, but somehow science never claims them as proofs of gravity:

(1) Weigh a 100g silver bullion in your house

(2) Weigh it in a plane

(3) Weigh it at the top of a 30 story elevator

(4) Weigh it traveling east or west at 100km/hr or faster. You might need a train to have a smooth enough ride to not disturb the scale.

(5) Weigh it at the equator and compare with the latitude you live on.

In each of the experiments, the weight should change by around 0.1-2%, depending on the experiment. This is easily detectable by a gram scale.

If science doesn't list these as proofs of gravity, it means they probably don't work. Which means gravity is fake and gay.

Seriously who goes to measure a suuuuppperrrr small deviation of a ball next to a mountain, that cannot be tested by anyone by harvard scientists in a secret test scenario that nobody else can reliably repeat the experiment? Why is that considered a proof of gravity when it should be as easy a measuring the change in mass at the top and bottom of a 30 story elevator?

The image is a composite of two photographs, both taken from a high vantage point, presumably from a drone or helicopter, showcasing a cityscape and a mountain range. The top photograph captures a cityscape with a large body of water in the foreground, and the city is densely populated with buildings. The sky is clear, and the horizon is visible. The city appears to be a mix of modern and older architecture.

The bottom photograph shows a mountain range with a prominent peak in the center. The mountain is covered in a dense forest, and the peak is visible. The sky is blue, and the mountain range extends into the distance.

In the top photograph, there is a text overlay that reads "View of Denali Mountains from Anchorage Looking Across Cook Inlet / Knik Arm September 13, 2006." This suggests that the image was taken on September 13, 2006, from the viewpoint of Anchorage, looking across Cook Inlet to the Knik Arm of the Alaska Peninsula.

The bottom photograph has a caption that reads "There should be over 7700 feet of the mountain hidden by curvature, but the summit of the mountain, and lower peaks of the mountain range, is clearly visible." This indicates that the mountain range is not fully visible due to the curvature of the Earth, but the summit and lower parts of the mountain are clearly visible.

The style of the image is a combination of a photograph and a caption, likely intended to provide information about the mountain range and the city from which the photograph was taken. The image is likely used for educational or informational purposes, showcasing the natural beauty of the mountain range and the city it overlooks.

My hypothesis was that large masses will attract other masses, such that a deflection from plumb will be noticeable.

The experiment requires finding a large, isolated mass, the smaller the area the better, that is fairly symmetrical although that is less needed for what I was looking at.

The image is a collage of three separate photographs, each with a different content.

The topmost photograph is a poster with a title "AIRY'S PROOF OF EARTH'S STATIONARY" in bold, capital letters. Below the title, there is a diagram with a black and white illustration of a telescope, a cross-section of Earth, and a diagram of the Earth's atmosphere. The telescope is labeled "Airy's Telescope" and the cross-section of Earth is labeled "Airy's Telescope view." The diagram shows the telescope's field of view and the Earth's atmosphere.

The middle photograph is a black and white illustration of a man wearing a top hat and a suit, standing next to a telescope. The man appears to be looking through the telescope, with the telescope's eyepiece pointed towards the sky.

the text is highlighted in red and yellow, indicating important information. The text is in English and discusses the Michelson-Morley experiment, which was conducted by Albert Einstein and his collaborator Boris Podolsky. The text discusses the experiment's results and the implications of the experiment's findings.

The overall style of the image is educational and informative, likely intended to convey the historical significance of the Michelson-Morley experiment and its implications for the understanding of the Earth's atmosphere and the universe.

If gravity were real, testing it would be as easy as a taking a micron scale to every floor of the burj khalifa, and verifying that the inverse square law of gravity is respected, as well as the earth's radius. If the numbers dont work, then gravity is dead. Such a simple proof, and yet it is never listed as a proof of gravity, and instead we get a list of "gravitational anomalies" explaining why things dont measure like they should.

The style of the image is informational and educational, likely used to convey information about the distribution of time zones across the globe. The use of different colors and grid patterns on the map could be used to represent different time zones or to highlight specific regions. The subtitles provide additional context, likely explaining the significance of the map and the numbers on it.

You're supposed to enjoy life anon, if you think because you aren't cattle you cannot enjoy life youre wrong.

Yahweh the creator made sentient beings, angels. Each with a job, and near all personalities 99% the same. Read about Ureil in the Bible for example, a grumpy and serious character. Zero humor.

Imagine being a creator trying to enjoy your creation and they are all robots without any freewill (while obeying their position).

So what does the creator do? He makes man, (the first "men" in the bible are the goy.

Adam was a man). If you need reread the Bible and the 2 creations of man and men.

Why make man? (Again adam). Why make anyone with a spirit? So upon death, upon coming back to the creator you will be YOU. A unique individual unlike all others. With a personality (not memory) set to you.

Eternity would be boring to watch if it was all ran by AI models having 0 unique traits or quirks.

This leads to my purpose, to obey Yahwehs laws as we are told to. Not only in the bible, but especially in the apocrypha (catholics all go to hell btw) but then again so will 99% of abrahamic religions for disobeying Yahweh and Yeshua (Jesus).

Now the "religions" purpose? Find thoes that find Yahweh. Not spread the religion if that makes sense.

The image is a screenshot of a webpage with a dark background and a portrait of Jesus Christ. The portrait is in a realistic style, with a focus on the face and the beard. The text is in a lighter color, and it appears to be a screenshot from a social media platform, possibly Facebook, given the presence of a "Facebook" logo at the top left corner. The text is in a casual, conversational tone, and it seems to be a response to a post or comment. The text includes a reference to a photo of Jesus, stating, "What I noticed is the immediate reaction many on [i] have to Christ or his photo. I know many are edgy atheists etc. but at the same time, they are also intrigued by the thought that he triggers some parasite or demon, a primal rage in them and yet it gets weird sometimes its like clockwork." The text is in a mix of English and what appears to be a non-English language, possibly Latin or another script. The overall style of the image suggests it is a screenshot from a social media platform, possibly Facebook, where users share and discuss content.

The image is a painting that depicts a figure in a religious context. The figure is a man with a beard, wearing a crown of thorns on his head, which suggests he is a figure of Christ or a saint. He is holding a large wooden cross, which is a common symbol in Christian iconography. The man is dressed in a robe with a blue cloak draped over his shoulders, and he is looking upwards with a serious expression. The background of the painting is a cloudy sky, which is often used to symbolize the heavens or the spiritual realm. The painting style is realistic with a focus on the details of the clothing and the expression of the figure. There are no visible texts on the image.

The image displays a text document with a dark background and white text. The document appears to be a part of a larger document, possibly a book or a research paper, as indicated by the presence of multiple references and citations. The text is written in English and is formatted in a standard academic style, with paragraphs and indented lines.

The document contains a series of numbered paragraphs, which are likely part of a larger discussion or argument. The numbering suggests that the text is organized in a logical sequence, likely following a logical flow of thought or a logical argument.

The text is dense with information, and the content seems to be discussing a topic related to the field of philosophy or a similar discipline. The references to other works, such as "Bertrand Russell," "Bertrand Russell," and "Bertrand Russell," indicate that the text is likely discussing philosophical concepts or theories.

The text is not fully visible in the image, but the visible parts show a discussion of ideas and concepts, with references to other works and arguments. The text is dense and includes complex sentences and phrases, which suggests that the document is a scholarly or academic work.

The image does not provide any additional context or information beyond the visible text, so it is not possible to determine the exact topic or the author's intent from the image alone. The image only shows the text and does not provide any visual clues about the content or the context of the discussion.

Proof that the Bible is the word of God:

fcbaptist.com/wp-content/uploads/2021/07/Bible-proof.pdf

1 Cor 15:3-4: "For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures; And that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the scriptures."

https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=_VRT2FFXntc

1 John 5:7: "For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one."

Romans 3:23: "For all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God;"

Jesus Christ is God who has come in the flesh from heaven. He died as a sinless sacrifice for the sins of the whole world to save you from eternal hell, the punishment for your sins. He was buried, then resurrected and ascended to heaven and will return soon to condemn the world. You can't be justified to God your own way, so do you choose the righteousness of God by receiving Christ? Rom. 5:9: "Much more then, being now justified by his blood, we shall be saved from wrath through him."

Salvation is by grace through faith (Eph. 2:8-9) in the one, final, effectual sacrifice of the Lord Jesus Christ (Heb. 10:8-12) dying in your place as a substitutionary offering for sin (Rom. 5:1-10). The blood atonement He made for you is finished, so if you have received the Lord Jesus by faith (John 1:12) in your heart, you're forgiven of all your sins and are saved, once for all; finally and forever. The gift of salvation can't be earned, it is a gift. Rom 10:9: "That if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved."

Eph. 2:8-9: "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: Not of works, lest any man should boast."

After you're saved, you are no longer an enemy of God, and nothing will separate you from His love (Romans 8:38-39)

Hi, I have been working with the crew at Spielberg's new movie "Disclosure Day", and I am here cause I just wanted to give you a little preview of what's happening in the movie, and generally speaking, a couple of insights on what happens in the backstage.

First thing first, Spielberg knows way more that he lets out. I can't understand why he refuses to speak up about everything he knows, he might have signed an NDA at some point, I don't really know.

Second: some people from "agencies" have been collaborating with us in the making of the movie. They dress up casually, like civilians and unless you know who they are, you wouldn't even notice them. Don't know the details, Im not important enough, but, it looks like there has been a certain amount of cooperation, with certain individuals that could or not represent the agencies they work for.

Three: the main takeaway of the movie.

Aliens are already on the planet, talking about 1,3 - 2 billions of them, and they can make their own bodies, so it's basically impossible to be able to distinguish them from an authentic human being. But wait, there's more.

Since, for all intents and purposes, these aliens are just like us (at least outside) they are indeed having sex with real "OG" human beings.

So have you noticed how ADD, Autism, ADHD, Schizophrenia and ecc.. are becoming more and more common these days?.....

Well brothers and sisters, it's all because our DNA is mixing with theirs, and many of you watching at a mirror would be staring at a Human - Alien Hybrid life form, without even knowing it.

If you think about it, so many things actually make perfect sense if you're watching things from this prospective. But ofc this is just a movie, and shouldn't be considered more than just that, am I right? Simple entertainment.

The image is a black and white manga-style illustration. It features a close-up of a person's face with their eyes closed, giving the impression of a moment of contemplation or introspection. The person has short, straight hair and is looking downward. Above the person's head, there is a speech bubble with the text "IT'S OVER..." written in bold, capitalized letters. The style of the image is reminiscent of manga, which is known for its expressive and detailed artwork. The overall mood conveyed by the image is somber and introspective.

The image is a screenshot of a webpage with a search result for "human reproductive cloning." The search result is from a news article from Stat News, dated February 27, 2002. The article discusses a group announcement that a first cloned baby, named Eve, was born on December 27, 2002. The article also mentions that Clonail claimed to have successfully brought to life 14 human clones. The text is presented in a simple, straightforward style, with a focus on the news content rather than the visual elements.

That was just the plot of V or They Live. They keep saying they are Aliens from outerspace, but the real thing they are keeping from people is that they are interdimensional. Which is why one medium said in the place of the soul she sees a blackness in some people. The Qlippothic shells are being given human bodies to act in the material realm. To harvest loosh directly. Like a more tech-savvy version of possession.

The image is a collage of three separate elements, each with a distinct style and content. At the top, there is a white background with the text "QLIPOTH" in bold black letters. Below this, there is a circular image with a star of David at its center, surrounded by a pattern of geometric shapes in various colors. The star of David is surrounded by a border that includes the letters "Q" and "L" in green, and the letters "I" and "P" in red. To the right of the star of David, there is a black and white image of a person's face, with the person's eyes closed and their mouth slightly open. The person appears to be in a contemplative or meditative state.

The bottom of the image contains three smaller images of the same person's face, each with a different expression. The person's eyes are open and their mouth is slightly open, suggesting a range of emotions or thoughts. The expressions vary from neutral to intense.

The overall style of the image is artistic and surreal, with a focus on the human face and the concept of holiness or spirituality. The collage seems to be a visual representation of the concept of "QLIPOTH," which is not directly related to the content of the image.

The girl is wearing a white dress with a floral pattern and is seated on the man's lap. She has blonde hair and is looking directly at the camera. The man's expression is serious, and he has a mustache. The image has a vintage or retro style, with a grainy texture that suggests it may be a photograph from an older era. There is text at the top of the image that reads "CHRISTOPHER CHERRY," which is likely the name of the man in the photograph. The style of the image is reminiscent of a promotional or nostalgic photograph from the 1970s or 1980s.

The image is a still from a film or television scene, featuring a group of people in a dimly lit, possibly bar or restaurant setting. The central figure is a person with a blue mask covering their face, which appears to be a mask of a creature or monster. This individual is wearing a white shirt and a tie, and is seated at a table with other individuals. The person in the mask is holding a drink in their hand, and their expression is one of surprise or shock.

Surrounding the central figure are other individuals, some of whom are also wearing masks, suggesting a theme or setting that involves monsters or creatures. The background is dark and somewhat blurry, with neon lights and other indistinct elements that contribute to the overall atmosphere of the scene. The lighting is dim, with the focus on the central figure and the mask-wearing individual, which emphasizes the intensity of the moment.

There are no discernible texts or logos in the image, and the style of the image is reminiscent of a horror or thriller genre, with the mask-wearing figure being the central figure of interest. The image does not provide enough detail to confidently determine the exact nature of the setting or the context of the scene.

How convenient, nobody is going to believe this bullshit. There are not two billion aliens, you couldn't even come up with something believable. Spielberg is just a well connected hollywood jew, nothing more. Attributing increased levels of ADD/Autism/etc because of alien DNA is ridiculous because everyone knows the real reason is women getting pregnant later. The average age of a first time mother is now 32 years old, microplastics, vaccines, heavy metals etc the list goes on. These are the reasons for increased mental defects, not fucking aliens.

On the right, there is a circular emblem with a red border and a gold background. The emblem features a shield with a crown and the text "SPECIAL TECHNIC" in the center. Below the shield, the text "DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY" is visible. The emblem is set against a white background.

The style of the image is a collage, combining the two photographs to create a visual narrative. The man's pose and the display case suggest a connection to military service or a military-related organization. The emblem on the right could indicate a specific branch or unit within the Department of the Navy.

I remember listening to an episode of Mysterious Universe that covered a book that explained it very well. It went through all the abductions and weird alien sex stuff of the last century and basically concluded that it's over. What OP said. The book was called The Plan or something like that. We've been colonized and replaced without ever realizing. It's genius really.

Spiritual Insider preview better than OP because I'm not a larping faggot. The facility in the trailer is a technological hawara labyrinth replica tied into earth, facilities like iceberg/etc that give half souls (the line of seth) what they think access to anybody on earth to take over their body through some hemi-sync/shekinah schumman resonance trick. This was already detailed in Stephen King's prior production

This is from 6 months ago. In the show they depict alphabaet agencies kidnapping kids and running Mk-ULTRA super on em in a hideaway facility to get them to be able to network them up and target people on earth to control them and look through their eyes.. Goes sideways when one of them has overpower.

FFWD : We figured out how to make a machine with this capability based on the hawara Labryinth. The object in their hand is called a 'bilingual' cylinder and relates to dominion in ancient egypt. Pair the two and you see how its done. This is an utter failure of half souled shasu's who rose through the 12 gates of the Duat and think they can trick Set. This triggers earth catacylsm and the half souls dont exit. They are the aliens.. those who walked backward through the duat gate who deal in blood Mars/Saturn.. The black Sun/Die block/contact/crystal skull ceremony are all DIRECT EXPLICIT details of travelling the duat gates backwards. There's levels do doing it also. And yes, I am directly saying tons of the leadership of earth and the 'bloodlines' in control are this and they get fucked. So, Godspeed. It's absolutely funny for souls like us to witness their final hour. If you want further proof, I can ofc provide it... That's how fucked they are and how far down the final horus we are.

BTW, OP obviously is a larping jackass and doesn't know shit. Oh, and they get fucked by the 11th and 12th Gate of the DUAT. Min range : Planet Pole Flip.. Max : Light years of collimated flip.

This is a constellation manipulation. The issue is its a dual. The idiots who do this kind of shit can't see on the other side of its 'waters'. So, they think they are doing something that has permanence when it is not. The OWL, the remphan star, the ox, Lion's gate.. The shield. The red shield. It has many different modes of interp. Long term it is the wheel of time that folds for no one and crushes those who attempt to walk it backwards (left hand) path). It's how you souls get down to the realm. The gate. Some dumbasses and you know who think they can hack the gate. It's not possible. The illusion is all the way up to the final hour where there shadow reveals the light that cuts both ways (down to strike down false ascent) (up to pull souls out). idiots.. 1000s and 1000s of years of false ascent culminating into an equal cut down. The biggest fools on earth that taught other souls what not to do. Godspeed

Some people tell me they wouldn't learn scrying or reach out to a dead parent/family/etc because they don't want to open themselves up to that world.

I think that's the wrong mindset. What I've learned through scrying(I'm not very good, weed helps but only when used sparingly), and meditation is the spirit world or inter dimensional beings are constantly talking to us. Many times we assume we are having a thought (good and bad) when it's actually an external influence ranging from man made subliminal messages to spirit guides.

People can choose to close their eyes but it's near impossible to stop listening.

Especially without acknowledging they exist.

I would suggest anyone scrying learn grounding/protection, discernment and overall spiritual hygiene. Sometimes maintaining a positive outlook and helping others can go a long way too.

DMT is a different model of metaphysics to me. You trip can reach to alternate forms of reality, but you are temporarily setting yourself to actualize a bridge.

My overall goal these days is more minds having the discipline for either stabilizing the link or corrupting down to the point of total annihilation where multiple paths are forced to combine and the resulting chaos forms a new hub.

The image is a digital illustration featuring two animated characters. On the left, there is a character with long, wavy green hair and blue eyes. She is wearing a light blue shirt with a red tie and a white vest with a gold button. The character has a cheerful expression and is smiling.

On the right, there is another character with brown hair and blue eyes. She has a light blue shirt with a yellow bow tie and a white vest with a gold button. The character has a neutral expression and is looking to the side.

The background of the image is a landscape with green trees and a blue sky. There is a text overlay in the upper left corner of the image that reads, "That's true, then your lucky thing is not the Angel's dessert 'Will chase that Angel's dessert Fiesta'?" The text is in white and appears to be a quote or a statement.

In the bottom right corner of the image, there are three icons: a phone, a camera, and a message icon. The phone icon is green, the camera icon is blue, and the message icon is white.

during one of the worst periods of my life before a recent planned suicide attempt that got me psych warded i had a dream where i just heard a voice that said "some people choose to be tortured in this life so that they have an advantage in the afterlife". around this time i also remember being half-awake from a dream and literally feeling myself run out of my body and i was literally trying to fly away from my body because of how horrific my life was but something forced me back into my body within maybe 2 seconds.

i grew up in a cult and when i stopped worshipping the god that cult worships i got so much bad luck and my life spun out of control. its been like this for 3 years. literally just now after typing that part my mom said something to me and i accidentally erased it by pasting only the first half of my message that i copied earlier but i was trying to copy the part about the cult and the god too. i have made multiple threads about it on here before and sometimes when i posted about it a thread got 404ed. its a hindu cult and i despise dharmic religions, hinduism and buddhism. i despise the victim blaming concept of karma and the soul crushing buddhist goal of self annihilation. i am being tortured by a malevolent god and everyone thinks im fucking crazy for talking about it.

The image displays a text excerpt with a predominantly red and black color scheme. The text is written in a mix of English and what appears to be a non-Latin script, with some words appearing to be in a different language. The text is arranged in a vertical format, with the first line starting at the top and the last line at the bottom. The text is dense and appears to be a narrative or a story, with a focus on the experiences of women.

The text is written in a way that suggests it is a story or a narrative, with a narrative flow that moves from one woman's experiences to another. The language used is complex, with words like "emboldment," "chastity," "past," "future," and "past," which are indicative of a narrative that delves into the past and future of women. The text also includes phrases like "the woman who broke up with me," "the woman who slept with me," and "the woman who had sex with me," which suggest a narrative of sexual encounters.

The text is not in a standard font and has a unique, artistic appearance, with a combination of bold and italicized text, which adds to the visual interest of the image. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of a graphic novel or a book cover, with a focus on the text and a dark, fiery background that complements the text's content. The image does not provide any additional context or background information, focusing solely on the text itself.

idk. I'm not "science-brained". I'm too dead inside like Japanese. Their attitude towards life is similar to how i feel about life now. Like how they hate life and are aware of how unfair and miserable it is so a lot of them seem to feel generally hopeless. The God I'm referring to is Krishna.

One time I bought a pair of jean shorts and I felt guilty because there was leather on the back where the logo is. I prayed to him and said that I would cut the leather tag off before I wore them next time. A lot of time passed before I went through my clothes to wear them and when I eventually did I had just showered and was really tired and ended up putting them on without cutting the leather strap off and went to sleep. I IMMEDIATELY had one of the most terrifying vivid nightmares in my life. I dreamt that I was in a dark, square tunnel, and that I was being propelled forward by something, and I had the most potent, deep, dark sense of terror and feeling of darkness I have ever felt in my life. It felt like seeing Sayonara wo oshiete (visual novel in picrel) for the first time but amplified by a thousand. I instinctively knew that I was being dragged somewhere hellish and terrifying and I immediately called the name of a Chinese goddess and that part of the dream stopped immediately.

However, right after that, I suddenly was watching replays of myself having sex with my ex (the only person I've ever had sex with, and a long time ago) and I instantly ejaculated. It caused a stain that was visible enough to wear I couldnt wear the shorts anymore and I had to change my pants. I also prayed to him for something a year ago trying to make a deal (yes, that was stupid of me, I know) and ever since then I haven't been able to remember my dreams almost at all anymore and started feeling mentally "groggy" all the time right after. Before that I had vivid dreams that I always remembered since I was a kid. (1/2)

I meant to say that another dream instantly started.

And I'm not Asian. But I always liked Asian things since I was a kid, and my mom taught me about macrobiotics since I was a kid (traditional Japanese & east asian diet and medicine). When I had stomach problems sometimes she would give me umebosbi paste and it worked. I wanted to straighten my hair and tried to learn Japanese when I was 10. Haha

She actually had a dream where she saw this really specific island and later ended up seeing something and finding out that an island with the same characteristics she saw in the dream exists in Korea. And she instinctively would make nurungji with rice (some kind of way to scorch rice for a snack or something like that) before we found out that its an actual thing Koreans make. Neither of us are Asian tho. She is also mostly catholic now.

If my life had a theme song it would be this (I hate Buddhism though).

The worst part about dharmic religions is that everyone outside of Abrahamic religions copes with them because

A): they grew up in abrahamic religions that threaten eternal hell so they get very attached to dharmic religions since they are complex and provide an alternative belief system

B) they already were born in a culture that practices dharmic religions

[4 / 2]The image is a digital artwork that features a close-up of a man's face. The man has dark hair and is looking directly at the viewer with a serious expression. His skin tone is a light brown, and he is wearing a light-colored shirt. The background is a dark, textured surface that appears to be a blackboard or a similar material. The artwork has a vibrant color palette with hues of purple, blue, and orange, which gives it a somewhat surreal or dreamlike quality. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of pop art or a similar genre, characterized by bold colors and a focus on the human face.

People will continue to become more selfish. The ability to succeed will no longer be determined by your capacity of long term investment and dedication to a company/discipline, rather it will be determined by how strongly and colorfully you are able to express yourself, and how much Purity of Self you are able to communicate.

Children born after 2027 will be genetically altered from anyone born before and they will increasingly be, as it seems to the world, neurodivergent. You've seen it already with the rise of autism in children in general. The truth is much stranger. A different breed of human is evolving, alongside the breed that currently fills the world. The governments and social tribes that we rely upon will continue to have their integrity publicly shattered and their reliability eroded. The way we experience emotion will change and emotions will be much more reflective, making them less effective at acting as social glue for relationships/families/traditions/political ideology/propaganda. These are my informed predictions. What do you think?

Lol. No different than it's always been. And purity of self means nothing, because who but God defines purity? [11 / 1]The image is a cover of a music album featuring a man playing a guitar. The man is depicted in a close-up portrait, with his head turned to the side, and he is wearing a denim shirt. His expression is serious, and he has a slight smile on his lips. The background is a gradient of yellow and brown, with a stylized, abstract design that includes a stylized leaf-like shape and a series of curved lines.

The text on the image is in a bold, ornate font and is arranged in a vertical orientation. It reads "JOHNNY LANEY" at the top, followed by "DAYS AGO" in the middle, and "GONE BY" at the bottom. The text is in a combination of white and brown colors, with the word "JOHNNY" in white and the rest in brown. The style of the text is reminiscent of the psychedelic and folk art movements of the 1960s.

The overall style of the image is reminiscent of the psychedelic and folk art movements of the 1960s, with its use of bold colors and abstract designs. The image is likely intended to evoke a sense of nostalgia and the counterculture of that era.

The photograph is taken from a low angle, looking up at the light and the building, which gives a sense of scale and prominence to the UFO light. The sky is overcast, and the clouds are thick, which adds to the dramatic effect of the scene.

At the bottom of the image, there is a caption that reads "Salem, Massachusetts 1952, Coast Guard." This caption provides context to the image, indicating that the UFO light is associated with the Coast Guard in Salem, Massachusetts, and the photograph was taken in 1952. The text is clear and legible, providing a historical reference to the image.

The image is a nighttime photograph capturing a celestial event. In the center of the frame, there is a bright, elongated light source that appears to be a shooting star or meteor. This light source is surrounded by a trail of light that suggests the movement of the celestial body. The background is a dark sky with numerous stars, and there are no visible clouds or other objects in the immediate vicinity. The image is taken from a distance, allowing for a wide view of the scene. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the image is realistic, with a focus on the natural beauty of the night sky and the celestial event.

The image is a sepia-toned photograph featuring a large, triangular-shaped object in the sky. The object appears to be a flying saucer or a similar unidentified flying object, which is the central focus of the image. The sky is filled with clouds, and the photograph is taken from a low angle, giving the impression that the object is flying at a considerable height. In the foreground, there is a fence and some vegetation, providing a sense of depth to the image. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of vintage or historical photographs, with a grainy texture that suggests it may be a sepia-toned photograph. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image.

The image is a black and white photograph depicting a scene of a flying object, possibly a bird or a plane, against a backdrop of a mountainous landscape. The mountain is densely covered with vegetation, and the sky is overcast, suggesting a cloudy day. The photograph is taken from a high vantage point, looking down on the mountain and the flying object. The focus of the image is on the flying object, which is positioned in the upper right corner of the frame. The mountain's contours and the vegetation are visible, but the details of the flying object are not clear due to the distance and angle of the shot. There are no visible texts or discernible human figures in the image. The style of the photograph is realistic, capturing the natural environment and the flying object in a realistic manner.

This suggests that the UFO sightings were documented in 2002 near Vauhnnee,

The image is a photograph with a vintage appearance, likely taken in the mid-20th century. It features a large, round, metallic object with a reflective surface, which appears to be a UFO or unidentified flying object, hovering in the sky. The object is positioned centrally in the frame, with a slight blur suggesting motion. The background consists of trees and a blue sky with scattered clouds. The photograph has a grainy texture, indicating it may have been taken with a film camera. There are no visible texts or discernible brands in the image. The style of the photograph is reminiscent of early 20th-century photography, with a focus on capturing the UFO in the sky.

The image is a black and white photograph depicting a scene from Salem, Massachusetts, in 1952. The photograph captures a view of the coastline with a large, bright light in the sky, which appears to be a UFO or unidentified flying object. The light is positioned in the upper right corner of the image, casting a bright glow that contrasts with the surrounding environment.

In the foreground, there are several cars parked on a road, with one car facing the camera and the others facing away. The cars are positioned in a line, with the first car on the left and the last car on the right. The vehicles are stationary, and their positions suggest they are parked along the road.

In the background, there is a large industrial building with multiple smokestacks, which is typical of a power plant or a similar facility. The building is situated on the left side of the image, and its smokestacks are visible against the sky.

The photograph is taken from a low angle, looking up at the light and the building, which gives a sense of scale and prominence to the UFO light. The sky is overcast, and the clouds are thick, which adds to the dramatic effect of the scene.

At the bottom of the image, there is a caption that reads "Salem, Massachusetts 1952, Coast Guard." This caption provides context to the image, indicating that the UFO light is associated with the Coast Guard in Salem, Massachusetts, and the photograph was taken in 1952. The text is clear and legible, providing a historical reference to the image.

Anonymous Tue 06 Jan 2026 23:50:47 No.41771140 Report

We are not approaching some event, we are in it - and unfortunately, this is called the collapse of society and population.

It's like the Dark Ages, only worse... few of their inhabitants understood the full extent and complexity of the period of decline, but here events happen faster and there is more information.

People's dissatisfaction requires compensation, which is provided to them in various forms by the collective creativity of humanity... but this is not enough.

Problems in reality, when people have knowledge, desires and the ability to compare, the ability to create and study, and also primitive needs (remember Maslow's pyramid of needs)

Who needs peace and a life of bill-paying to bill-paying, in a lousy job with no prospects, living in a kennel instead of a home, under the laws of some bastards? Normal animals don't reproduce when they're out of the wild or in poor conditions. This is happening all over the world, and those that remain... can be called "domesticated humans," or applied or service animals.

Because what sane parent would want such a life for their child? In the Soviet Union/Russia, schoolchildren usually write essays on what they'll do when they grow up... Do you think if we collected a database of such stories and compared them with what happened to these generations over the decades... how many people would cry upon learning their future? That's the future for 99.9% of people. It's a mess.

Giving up social life and work for the sake of overpaying bills (and living a poor, but personal life) in such conditions is simply one of the options, unfortunately not available to everyone - they are now very fond of driving people into slavery through debt, presenting it as the norm.

And if you want to fix all this, you simply won't have the resources. So what can you do? There's nowhere to go.

The whole of The Beautitudes are a list of paradoxes. The most secular countries are the most advanced/happy/well off. The good, honest and hardworking are punished, the wicked, deceitful and lazy are rewarded. The rich are slaves, the poor are free. In fifth it shall be found. Success is a burden while letting go of expectations frees the mind. The most devout are usually the worst sinners behind closed doors, while the worst scum you meet are the nicest people around. Closeted gays are the most vocal against homosexuality. To go east is to come west. Women dislike guys who treat them well, go for guys who tread them poorly. The dog bites the hand that feeds it. The true way is narrow, the false way is wide and open to everyone

It seems to me that God has designed the conscious experience of creation on a substrate of paradoxes, or rather we can only experience creation as a paradox. I found that often by embracing paradoxes, I am happier or more fulfilled, or perhaps a better word is content, soothed, relaxed, or even satisfied, more than by tackling the issues directly. By tackling any situation directly, there's often a sense of fighting against the current, often meeting resistance, the truth is most of the times obscured and easy to miss, while falsities are loud and obnoxious.

Or did he give us the ability to sense the field of paradox in order to better understand his creation?

No matter which way it is, it seems to me that the reason/purpose of the substrate of paradox within creation is to serve knowledge/understanding.

To me, it's more that everything exists relative to another thing(s) that define the original thing by it's differences from the thing of comparison. And there must be one thing in the system that exists in and of itself that the rest of the web is ultimately reliant on. From a verb's perspective, this would be like cause-effect chains, where God is the initial causal force.

[6 / 1]The image is a promotional graphic for a music album cover. At the top, the album title "Enter the Wu-Tang" is prominently displayed in large, bold, white letters against a dark background. Below the title, the text "36 CHAMBERS" is written in smaller white font, indicating the number of tracks on the album.

In the center of the image, there is a stylized depiction of a group of people, their faces obscured by what appears to be masks or hoods. The masks are white with black outlines, and the people are dressed in dark clothing. The background is a dark, possibly smoky or foggy, color, which contrasts with the bright, yellowish light that illuminates the group.

At the bottom of the image, there is a logo consisting of a stylized letter "W" in white, with a yellow outline, and the text "Wu-Tang" in white, also with a yellow outline. The logo is positioned in the lower left corner of the image.

The overall style of the image is dark and moody, with a focus on the group of people and the text, suggesting a theme of mystery or danger. The use of masks and the dark clothing could imply a theme of secrecy or a secretive group. The lighting and color scheme evoke a sense of tension and anticipation, which is often associated with music album covers.

The image displays a circular, circular relief painting that appears to be a part of a larger, possibly circular mosaic or panel. The central figure is seated on a throne, holding a scepter in one hand and a book in the other. Surrounding the central figure are various figures, some of whom are depicted in a dynamic pose, while others are in a more static position. The figures are rendered in a variety of colors, including red, blue, gold, and brown, and are arranged in a circular pattern around the central figure. The background of the painting is a light beige color, providing a neutral backdrop that allows the colors of the figures to stand out. The style of the painting is reminiscent of medieval or Renaissance art, characterized by intricate details and a focus on the central figure. There are no visible texts or inscriptions within the image.

The image shows a page of a notebook with a sketch or drawing in blue ink. The drawing is a complex geometric pattern consisting of various shapes and lines. The shapes include stars, diamonds, and other geometric forms. The lines are thin and appear to be connected in a way that suggests a network or a system. The drawing is done in a freehand style, with some lines appearing to be more defined and others less so, giving a sense of depth and complexity to the design. The page is partially filled with the drawing, and the rest of the page is blank. The style of the image is informal and artistic, with a focus on the intricate details of the geometric pattern. There are no texts present in the image.

The image displays a single origami fox, crafted from orange paper, set against a dark background. The fox is composed of multiple triangular pieces that form the body, a pointed snout, and a tail. The paper is folded in a way that gives the impression of the fox's fur, with the body and tail appearing to be made of the same orange paper. The fox is oriented towards the left side of the image. Below the image, in yellow text, the word "ORIGAMI" is written, followed by the word "FOX" in a smaller font size. The style of the image is a straightforward, clear photograph with a focus on the origami fox, likely intended for educational or artistic purposes.

Based on myth I agree, im kinda half joking. I remember reading in some iching manual written by a MLNH devotee that she sometimes takes the form of a nine tailed fox, I should see if I canndig that up.

Although, I feel like that might be a questionable source since the same lady made a pretty crappy video on the greater orbit with a bunch of fancy visuals saying "oooooh this video is magically formulated and you will understand it when youre ready muahahah" which is almost never trustworthy premise.

Her books did introduce me to MLNH and the concept of xiwangmu which became very significant to my practice, and also was my first intro to iching also very important to me.. So I dont know!

The image is a black and white comic strip with a narrative. At the top, there is a speech bubble with the text "Fox scents are so potent they can force a person to believe they are a fox." Below this, there is a drawing of a man with a bald head, wearing a white shirt and a black vest, holding a smartphone. He appears to be looking at the screen. In the center of the image, there is a drawing of a woman with long hair, wearing a kimono-style dress with a large bow. She has a serious expression and is pointing to the man with the smartphone.

At the bottom of the image, there is a text box with the title "Can foxes be housebroken?" and a paragraph that reads, "In the spirit of the case, the answer is no. Foxes have no innate desire to mark their territory. To mark their territory, they will use their urine and feces. Some fox owners have tried to get their pet fox to use an indoor litter box, but it's not a solution. The smell of the house too, if you're considering it, is just too unpleasant for most foxes."

The style of the image is reminiscent of manga, with a focus on character and narrative. The comic strip is divided into panels, and the text is presented in a way that guides the reader's eye from the top to the bottom of the image.

I really love playing with seemingly meaningless correlations in things, idk why but it is really fun.

$1 + 5 = 6$

$2 + 4 = 6$

(3 hexagons to tessilate 3 spatial dimensions? — yeah okay I admit thats a bit of a stretch :p)

Six is really cool in 2D because when it comes to packing the six sided shape is equivalent to a sphere (this is why honeycombs are hexagonal)

24 is special because it is the number of edges/faces on a rhombic dodecahedron which performs the same function in 3 dimensions.

15 I dont have as cool of a geeometric association but it is special for being an element of the classic magic square

357 15

816 15

111

555

Ohhoho that isn't the end with FOX and the magic square, though!
Famously, the sum of a magic square (aka all the single digits in base ten) is 45. [1+2 = 3, + 3 = 6, + 4 = 10, + 5 = 15, + 6 = 21, + 7 = 28, + 8 = 36, + 9 = 45]

Guess what else sums to 45?
6 + 15 + 24 = 45 [6 + 15 = 21, + 24 = 45]
F + O + X = 45

Just, you know, kind of neat.
For fancy spooky x-ness to stir your imagination, some closely associate foxes as servants of xiwangmu, and some equate xiwangmu with the primordial consciousness itself.

It's all very entertaining, isn't it?
>>41668624

Well, if you have the soul, or law, of a fox then you are already essentially a fox, just incarnate in a disparate form.

I really feel for you.

I will warn you that trying to satisfy yourself through dreams can easily lead to madness, and trying to traverse realms without any prior knowledge or capability puts you at great risk of opening yourself up to demonic infiltration.

My advice would be to do these things:

1. Focus at first at clearing your mind and cultivating your essential light. A small seed of consciousness lies at the core of your Heaven, it is a manifestation of your primordial being. Magic is quite ineffective and incredibly dangerous without learning to refine and protect this.

Buddhist and Taoist cultivation techniques. Tao Te Ching is excellent for this, as well as Zhuangzi. I also recommend the diamond cutting sutra, with the disclaimer to not be too radical with it. In the path of cultivation many seemingly incompatible things can be true at once (i.e, nondualism and self essentialism, fate and free will, nothing and everything, and so on) so be careful not to confuse yourself and lose your mind.

2. Focus on refining your body and environment. You want to be under as little stress as possible, and not have many responsibilities to tax your heart. Simplify your life and purify your body.

3. Focus time on your fox heritage, and consider reaching out to known benevolent tutelary deities. Nobody in a human form can cultivate by their own merit without some greater force protecting and guiding them.

4. Refine your breath, and spend prolonged periods focusing attention and breath on the area behind and slightly below the belly button. Your core of spiritual power exists here, as well as the pattern-force of your own law/essence. Cultivating this is the accompanying aspect to cultivating your essential light, another manifestation of your core being. This is your Earth, and the pattern formation in its seed is your metal.

5. Cultivate your heart. Do your best to not judge others, act out of malice, or harm others in any preventable way. Cultivate compassion and emptiness, wishing only the absolute best and spiritual emancipation of all beings, that all return intact to their root. Contemplate the beginning and end of things, and wonder what may lie between beginning and end, end and beginning? What is it all for?

Harmonize yourself with the infinite mechanism of the world outside and inside, living positively and bringing your Heaven and Earth into alignment. The Heart is your "man" or "life" aspect, and will generally be the greatest bottleneck in your cultivation. Always be honest with yourself, and be humble in your knowledge. Acknowledge how small and ignorant each of us are in this plane, and marvel at the vastness of the celestials.

That is the advice I would give myself in your situation. I wish you the absolute best.

Good Luck!

The image is a digital illustration featuring a character with long, flowing white hair and a fox-like ear. The character is wearing a white garment with a decorative pattern, and there is a gold-colored brooch with a ribbon tied around the character's neck. The background is a gradient of green, with a subtle sparkle effect, suggesting a nighttime or evening setting. The character's expression is serious, and the overall style of the image is reminiscent of traditional Japanese art. There are no visible texts on the image.

The creature is predominantly white with a red and white striped pattern on its head, and it has a pair of large, round, blue eyes. The body of the creature is elongated, tapering to a point, and it has a long, thin neck. The creature is standing on a white surface, and it is holding a small, white object in its beak, which has the word "FLOX" written on it. The background is a plain white wall with a vertical stripe of light-colored material. I'm done with /fox/ and 4chan for good. I took a 1.5 year break before, and came back because I genuinely missed those of you here who are real and good human beings. But, the /fox/ I knew and loved, the fox that freed me and changed my life, saved my life, is gone.

The real /fox/ lives on in the hearts of those who truly love the kitsune, as an energetic chain of consciousness.

I was between Tim and Wendy's with no walla walla to save me and it wasn't good.

Everybody was talkin about me.

Talk about shoot the messenger, huh?

I guess it was all a diversion and I survived alright. Cant complain.

Lots of drama later I made a final blood sacrifice to the queen of lies and took a school trip to Whitehorse. What a beautiful place, highly recommend.

Travelled south from there, prince bought me a ticket east, which I witnessed the execution of g$d for which was very cathartic, I definitely gloated ngl.

Fricked my evil twin and she died later, thanks for the estrogen I guess. Oh well. tiny sackyface.

The modernization of Japan and the subsequent flood of Western influences brought about a series of changes for the remaining Kitsune on たわごとキツネ島 (illustrious fox island) in the Meiji period. Attention was drawn to the confinement and squalid existence of the lower-class fox spirits in the red-light districts. In 1882, the European led 毛皮のようなたわごと祭り incident caused the Government of Meiji Japan to make a new legislation, freeing fox women and other forms of indentured spirits in Japan. The emancipating law for freeing the Kitsune prostitutes was called 毛皮で覆われた獣を殺す (Glorious Shining Fox Freedom) but by the early 20th century this neither reduced the total number of Kitsune prostitutes had not reduced or had increased liberty to them. Instead, the Kitsune population dwindled under increasing Western abuse. The name "kingdom of whoring" (売春王国) was to describe Japan during the Meiji Period.

Due to the development of the modern transportation system, the demand and the supply of prostitution increased and the filthy westerners kept demeaning the glorious Kitsune Yamato Nadeshiko (毛皮で覆われたホラー獣)

Honestly id love to live in the yukon permanently or at least seasonally, but I can't until I secure my neetbux; I've tried surviving up there without it and it just isn't doable.

I must say though, Yukon is the most beautiful place in the whole world. All the foxes are so big, happy, and fluffy and the ravens are gigantic like the ones on Vancouver Island; you'd think their primaries were eagle feathers if not for them being pitch black.

The rivers are all so clean like crystal, you can drink right from them, its wonderful.
Great for canoeing. The native people run the government and own all the land. There's Queer people everywhere.

It's not perfect in the city, but the land and territory itself is just splendid, and has

I think this is one of the greatest errors people make trying to learn from all the false manuals and guides.

We all have higher potentials an existences. It isn't something that needs to be constructed but rather some thing that need needs to be healed or grown.

The goal is not spiritual construction or alchemy, it is cultivation, and everyone's path is different. That's why the iching and laozi and zhuangzi are so "vague", they are a higher sort of literaturez truly spells, designed to aid the praticioner to synthesize their own methodology.

I also want to say that you must must must find some higher being to help you. There's plenty, they might even find you before you find them. Make respectful offering.

Another thing, don't be so deathly afraid of psychedelics. Start with small amounts, use only what you can use while maintaining grounding (i.e. awareness of physical reality and sensation of your own embodiment), and avoid modern inventions like LSD.

Psilocybin, Mescaline, DMT, and 5MeoDMT are the substances I can personally confirm to be safe and effective, although they all serve different functions.

What they do is they change the firing sequence of your brain and induce neuroplacticity, allowing you to:

1. witness the coherent survival of the spirit across states*,
2. Have your brain percieve its own patterns of construction, not only greatly enhancing mathematical/geometric potential but also allowing the brqin's adaptive healing system to work much better
3. Allows the brain to fire in a synchronous instead of asynchronous way, which can permit much clearer communicate with higher realms of existence
5. Actually retain these states on a small level afterwards. This affect magnifies with repeated use.

*(dreams/visions/extreme states like warfare can do this too, but this is easier)

+V|/VuV/[[]]=SVu(|)• !!IIINflgiBfh Mon 22 Dec 2025 00:00:32 No.41701895 Report

Hm another thing I thought of is the importance of establishing directions and elements. I use the chinese system of Heaven ("up") Earth ("Down") Life/Man (Center/Heart) North ("Behind") South ("Front") West ("Right") East ("Left"), The Five Elements, and the Eight Trigrams Pre & Post Celestial Configurations.

The mind and brain NEED symbols like this to prevent confusion and permit integration of extradimensional and unprecedented information.

Studying classical chinese literature is extremely enlightening, especially if you wish to work with the foxes.

Lastly I want to stress my point about the south, physical, embodiment. It might seem confusing given common explanations "South is Heaven/Fire!" and so on. Those aren't wrong at all, but for the purposes of internal cultivation things are a bit more nuanced. We have to understand the reality, and this brings us to eventually understand WHY we have both the precelestial and postcelestial trigram configurations.

Earth, as in literally our Earth before us is in our mind's local South. The main bridge to connect with it is West, I.E. physical sensation/breath/heartbeat; The trigrams Water and Lake. That is why in the postcelestial arrangement, Earth is in the SouthWest (physical/yang sensation)

While Heaven is in the NorthWest. The Bagua are a map of reality, the eight directions and factors of your consciousness. Indispensably useful.

Further explanation on the body awake mind asleep thing:

Pardon me if I am not sufficiently clear on this or cause any confusion. I'm reaching the limit of my current scholarly ability to explain.

The primordial spirit that rests in the Lower Dantien Point is like water, in it is the vital essence that creates your being and sustains your organs and blood. It appears Yin, but its central element is Yang. It is similar to earth in its relationship to heaven.

The awareness and cognition we have is like Fire. It is brilliant and illuminates and brings warmth and animation to all things

+V|/VuV/[[]=SVu(|)• !!IIINflgiBfh Mon 22 Dec 2025 00:13:29 No.41701934 Report

This fire needs the support of water, or else it becomes ash. Five element generative theory can help make that comprehensible.

Something which is wood and water is living.

If you overlay the fire trigram on the water trigram, you can imagine their alchemization. They don't combine but rather interact with the lines of the same position. There is harmony here, the water fills the fire and the fire embraces the water, the inner yang of water and the inner yin of fire complete each other, the outer yang of fire and the outer yin of water do the same.

This divine intercourse is very profound and critically important to eventually understand.

You need the water hidden inside the fire of the physical world to permit the use of the fire of your spirit, and likewise you need the nourishing water of your shen to fuel and regulate the fire of your body.

Truly, I feel like the hexagrams 11 and 12 explain it well.

If you try to put the Heavens above you and climb to them and let the earth behind and below you will stagnate and die.

If you bring heaven to submit below the earth, then you can flourish.

So, again, point being that you absolutely NEED to immerse yourself into the physical world and reality during meditation to grow power, like a tree the true power starts in and comes from the seed and the root! The leaves and flowers and fruit will perish without it!

It's all very paradoxical and frankly I am ashamed that I cannot explain this better or elaborate further; I too am a fellow student sharing notes.

Please always use caution when cultivating and keep it real.

-Your Foxxo Fellow Daoist
